Gc
974.402
C14gil
1483204

M! L.

GENEALOGY COLLECTION

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 1833 01115 0031

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2015

https://archive.org/details/theatrummajorumc1776gilm

THE HARVARD SQUARE OF 1776.

The Cambridge of 1776:

Theatrum Majorum.

The Cambridge of 1776:

Wherein is set forth an Account of the Town, and of the Events it Witneſſed:

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED

THE DIARY OF DOROTHY DUDLEY,

Now firſt publiſh'd;

ogether with an Hiſtoricall Sketch; Severall Appropriate Poems; Numerous Anecdotes, patriotick, weighty, indifferent, and diverting; Many References to the Renowned University; and Deſcriptions of the People of the Olden Time.

All of which is adapted to the furtherance of Good Manners, Virtue, Piety, Intelligence, Love of Country, and ADMIRATION OF CAMBRIDGE.

Done by Divers Eminent Hands, and

Edited for the Ladies Centennial Committee by A. G.

Hîc manus, ob patriam pugnando vulnera paſſi
Quique pii vates, et Phœbo digna locuti:
Inventas aut qui vitam excoluere per artes,
Quique ſui memores alios fecere merendo. — VIRG.

Quæ fugiunt, celeri carpite poma manu. — OVID.

Adorned with Cuts and a Map.

2c
974.402
C14 gil

CAMBRIDGE:

Printed on the Site of Fort Number One: Over againſt the Town of Brighton, on the River's Side. To be ſold in Boſton by Lockwood, Brooks, and Company, on Waſhington and Bromfield Streets.

M D CCC LXX VI.

☞ The Ladies find that the Latin title of this Volume contains an Intimation that the Book is a Stage on which our Ancestors (those who have "gone over to the Majority") are the Actors.

The Quotation from Virgil proves to have been taken from a Description of Elysium, and is therefore eminently appropriate in its place. One learned in tongues translates it thus: "Here is a Company of Heroes who were wounded fighting for their Country; of pious Bards who sung in strains worthy of Apollo; of those who have improved human Life by the Arts they have invented; and those who have by their services made other men cherish their memory."

The Line from Ovid conveys the following admonition: "Pluck with quick Hand the Fruit that is passing away."

Organization of the Ladies' Centennial Committee, of Cambridge, Mass.

MRS. THOMAS P. JAMES, Chairman.

MRS. J. GARDNER WHITE, Treasurer.

MISS ALICE M. LONGFELLOW, Secretary.

MRS. ANSON BURLINGAME.	MRS. GEORGE LIVERMORE.
MRS. HENRY DEXTER.	MRS. HENRY W. PAINE.
MISS MARY FELTON.	MISS MARY PARMENTER.
MRS. JOHN M. FISKE.	MRS. SAMUEL B. RINDGE.
MRS. C. L. HARDING.	MRS. GEORGE P. SANGER.
MRS. HENRY O. HOUGHTON.	MRS. EMORY WASHBURN.

Editor for the Committee, ARTHUR GILMAN, M. A.

Copyright, 1875,
By LOCKWOOD, BROOKS, & CO.

1483204

Advertisement to the Reader,

For the better Illustration and Understanding of this Book.

GENTLE READER: — This little Book is the Fruit of a Labour of Love, for which the Writers receive no Reward but that filial Satisfaction which must fill the virtuous Heart after having made an earnest Effort to do Honour to the Memory of the Fathers, and to depict the Nobility they displayed in the Struggle for Liberty.

The plan of commemorating our venerated Ancestors in this way (and of drawing a few Dollars into the Treasury of the Ladies' Centennial Committee of Cambridge), first suggested itself to Mrs. George Livermore. It was promptly adopted by the Committee, and the Work was delegated to the present Editor. He was gratified to find a general Interest in the Project, and the Papers composing this Volume were obtained within a few Weeks.

The wish of the Editor, and his Co-laborers, has been to present a Picture of The Cambridge of 1776; putting the Reader in Possession of such Facts as would enable him to realize the Feelings of our Fathers; to see the Streets they trod, the Churches in which they worshipped, the Houses in which they dwelt; and, in some Measure, to appreciate the Trials they unflinchingly endured.

It is thought that this little Book will be found very pleasant for all the People of Cambridge to read, and most necessary to remember. What, indeed, would we not give for such a Volume written by our Fathers of 1776, about their Fathers of 1676? What will tempt our Children of 1976 to part with the Copies which (after committing their Contents to Memory) we shall bestow in our Atticks to await the Morn of their hundredth Year?

But the Editor believes that this Memoir of the Olden Time will possess an Interest for many Thousands beyond the Limits of Cambridge, whose Ancestors fought in the Revolution, as well as for a who rejoice in the Liberty then made sure. Can Words or Figure express the Value of a true Record of a Town famed as the first Camp ground of the Revolution; renowned for its ancient University; and known the world over for its Poets, Historians, Novelists, Men c Science, and of State-craft, — its Winthrops, Vassalls, Brattles, Bel chers; its Kirkland, Sparks, Everett, Felton, Agassiz; its Longfellow, Lowell, Holmes, Howells; its Peabody, Abbot, Child; — men wh will ever wear Laurels that cannot fade?

It can be said of our beloved Home that its every natural Trait ha been celebrated in Prose or Verse. Not to enter into Detail, it ma be mentioned that Mr. Longfellow has immortalized its Village Smithy and its Head-quarters of Washington; Dr. Holmes and Mr. Lowel have celebrated its Graveyard, its Marshes, its River, its Sidewalk and Trees, even the very Dust of its Streets,[2] and Mr. Howells send its Horse-cars down the Track of the Ages to the perpetual Delec tation of our Children's Children.

When Samuel Purchas, Master of Arts, set forth his Book entitled "A Theatre of Politicall Flying Insects, accompanied by Three Cent uries of Observations Theologicall and Morall, drawn from the Nature the Worth, the Work and the Wonder of the Bee," he used Words whicl the present Editor adopts as his own. "Embroiderers," said Purchas "of Threds of divers Colors make a costly and delightful Hanging: S Writers out of a Thousand Parcels, an uniform and agreeing Body whom I have labored to imitate. Where I have failed pardon my Weak ness, and accept my good will."

The Ladies and their Servant, the Editor, desire to express thei cordial Thanks

To President Eliot; Messrs. F. O. Vaille and H. A. Clarke, Editors of the "Harvard Book;" Mr. S. A. Drake; Messrs. J. R. Osgood & Co., and Messrs. H. O. Houghton & Co., for the free Use of the Cuts with which the Volume is adorned;

To Mr. Sibley, for Courtesies received at the College Library;

[1] "Long days be his, and each as lusty-sweet,
As gracious natures find his song to be;
May Age steal on with softly-cadenced feet,
Falling in music, as for him were meet,
Whose choicest verse is harsher-toned than he!" — Lowell.

[2] See page 110.

To the Librarian of the Essex Institute, at Salem, for similar kind ttentions ;

To Mrs. M. C. Sparks, Miss C. L. Donnison, Miss Mary Howe, nd Others for the Use of valuable Letters ;

To the present Occupants of the ancient Houses, for Permission to isit and describe them ;

To Mr. Longfellow, Mr. Lowell, and Dr. Holmes, for their kind 'ermission to use the Extracts from their Poems, which are to be ound in the Volume ;

To Dr. Peabody, Mr. Howells, Mr. John Holmes, Mr. Scudder, Mr. Iaskins, Mr. Lathrop, Mrs. Folsom, and Mrs. James, for their Con-ributions ;

To Miss Mary Williams Greely, for the untiring Diligence, and sym-athetic Zeal with which she has laboured in consulting historical Au-horities and in verifying all the Details of the entertaining Diary f Dorothy Dudley, and in preparing it for the Press ;

To Mr. Charles Deane, for his valuable Aid in the Verification of nportant Facts and Dates, and in the Examination of a large Portion f the Manuscript of this Book ;

To Mr. Justin A. Jacobs, the long-time City clerk, for valuable Aid ;

To the Reverend Lucius R. Paige, for Information and Sugges-ons ;[1]

To Miss Mary Isabella James, for collating Authorities, and prepar-ig the Map which illustrates the Volume ; and

To Messrs. Lockwood, Brooks, & Co., Booksellers in Boston, for indly offering to sell this Book without the usual Commissions.

It only remains to add that this Memoir is DEDICATED TO THE PEOPLE OF CAMBRIDGE

OF 1976.

CAMBRIDGE, Thanksgiving Day, 1875.

[1] The Editor understands that Mr. Paige has for Years had in Preparation a History of Cambridge, e Appearance of which is looked for with much Interest.

AD SUUM CUIQUE REDDENDUM.

A SECOND EDITION of this Book being demanded, the Editor embraces the opportunity to confess that the Diary of Dorothy Dudley was written expressly for The Cambridge of 1776, by Miss Greely.

The Name of the Diarist was the Editor's Invention, but the Facts she records were, through Miss Greely's untiring Perseverance, derived from original Letters, Diaries, and other authentick Documents and Histories. In no case has intentional Liberty been taken with any Historick Person or Event.

It ought to be known that the Views of the College Halls, the President's House, and the Congregational Church, are from Sketches made by Miss Eliza Susan Quincy, of Boston, for President Quincy's History of Harvard University, published in 1840. The Views of the Wigglesworth House and the Old Parsonage are also from Sketches by Miss Quincy, but for whose Taste and Industry no pictorial Reminder of either venerable Building would probably remain to the next Generation.

CAMBRIDGE, Evacuation Day, 1876.

The Table

Of the Contents of this Book.

PAGE

I. Sonnet. — Dorothy Dudley. By William D. Howells 1

II. Sketch of the History of Cambridge from its Settlement in 1631 to 1776. By David Greene Haskins, Jr. 3

III. The Influence of Cambridge in the Formation of the Nation. By Andrew P. Peabody, D. D. 12

IV. Extracts from the Diary of Dorothy Dudley, from April 18*th*, 1775, to July 19*th*, 1776.

The Battle of Lexington, p. 18 — The Army gathers on Cambridge Common, p. 20 — Citizens leave Boston, p. 21 — Ticonderoga, p. 22 — Gage offers Pardon to all but Adams and Hancock, p. 23 — Battle of Bunker Hill 24

Washington appointed Commander-in-chief, p. 25 — His Appearance in Cambridge, p. 26 — Fast Day, p. 27 — Aaron Burr — Letter to Miss Livingstone, p. 28 — Cambridge described, p. 29 — Dr. Appleton and his poultry, p. 31 — John Hancock and Dorothy Quincy, p. 32 — The Vassall Houses, p. 34 — The Expedition to Quebec, p. 36 — Dr. Franklin in Cambridge, p. 37 — The Traitor Church 38

Raising a new Army, p. 40 — British Ships captured, p. 41 — Mrs. John Adams in Cambridge — Society at Major Mifflin's, p. 42 — Gen. Lee and his Dog — Crime in Camp — Letter from Washington, p. 43 — Mrs. Washington arrives in Cambridge — Distress of the Army . . . 44

Sketch of Harvard College, pp. 44–48 — The first Graduate, p. 44 — Eaton, and his Misdeeds, p. 45 — President Dunster, p. 45 — Rules of the College — Library increased, 46 — The College visited in 1680, p. 47 — Other Presidents — Harvard Hall burned 48

Christ Church opened for Service, p. 49 — The Congregation of former Days described, 50 — Union Flag raised on Prospect Hill, p. 51 — The Colonists more than ever united, p. 52 — Faneuil Hall desecrated — Friendly Indians in Cambridge, p. 63 — Paine's "Common Sense" issued 54

The unsuccessful Expedition to Quebec, p. 55 — A reception by Mrs. Washington — Original letter of Washington, p. 56 — Games of Chance prohibited by Washington, p. 57 — The Soldiers' Rations — Desire of Washington to attack Boston, p. 58 — Dorchester Heights occupied — Fast Day appointed, p. 59 — Boston evacuated by Gen. Howe — Boston open to All, p. 60 — Washington congratulated by Congress, p. 61 — He attends the "Thursday Lecture" — Leaves Cambridge 62

Miss Dudley visits Boston, p. 63 — The Hancock House, p. 64 — King's Chapel — North Church, p. 65 — Copp's Hill — Gov. Hutchinson's Mansion, p. 66 — People of Note in Cambridge in 1776, p. 67 — Affairs in Boston, again, p. 70 — Dr. Byles 71

A drive through Cambridge, p. 72 — The Meeting-House, Court-House, p. 73 — President's House, Wigglesworth House, Butler's Hill, Inman House, p. 74 — Phipps House, Bradish Tavern, Brattle House, p. 75 — The five College Buildings, Hastings House, The Whitefield Elm, p. 76 — Church or Tory Row, Belcher House, Vassall House, p. 77 — Sewall House, Lee House, p. 78 — Ruggles or Fayerweather House, Oliver House 79

Cambridge anticipates the Declaration of Independence, p. 80 — British Fleet leaves Boston, p. 81 — Students return from Concord, p. 82 — July 3d, 1776, p. 83 — Letters of Edmund Quincy, p. 84 — Independence declared 87

V. The Guests at Head-Quarters. By H. E. Scudder . . . 89

VI. The Batchelder House, and its Owners. By Mrs. Isabella James 93

VII. English Letter describing the Battle of Lexington. Contributed by Mrs. M. C. Sparks 103

VIII. Letters of Edmund Quincy. Contributed by Miss Donnison . . 106

IX. Verses on the Scenery of Cambridge. By Mr. Lowell and Dr. Holmes 110

X. The Old Court House. By John Holmes 111

XI. Lament of the Weathercock of 1776. By Mrs. Charles Folsom . 115

XII. Praise of the Past. By George Parsons Lathrop 117

XIII. Partial List of Authorities consulted in Preparing this Book . . 119

XIV. Index 121

List of Illustrations.

I. The Harvard Square of 1776 . . . . . Frontispiece.
II. Map of the Cambridge of 1776 2
III. The Congregational Church 11
IV. The Washington Elm 13
V. The Old President's House 16
VI. Portrait of General Joseph Warren 19
VII. The Old Parsonage, built in 1670 30
VIII. Portrait of Samuel Adams 33
IX. Cannon used before Boston 41
X. Hessian Flag 52
XI. Second Harvard Hall, built in 1766 54
XII. Hollis Hall, completed in 1763 61
XIII. The Wigglesworth House 73
XIV. Holden Chapel 76
XV. The Sewall-Riedesel Mansion 78
XVI. Stoughton Hall. (Taken down in 1780) 81
XVII. The Brattle Arms 90
XVIII. The Belcher Arms 95

Dorothy Dudley

Fair maiden, whom a hundred summers keep Forever seventeen, and whose dark locks
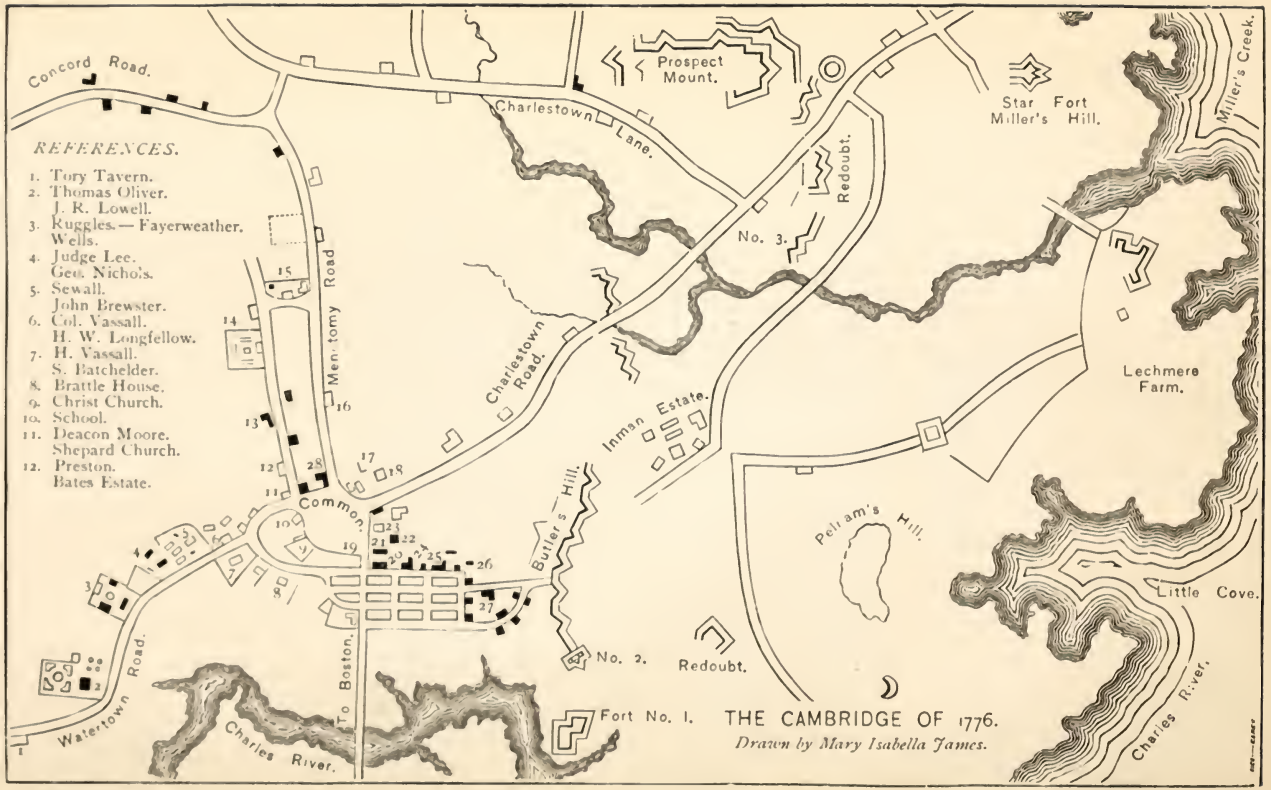
Are whitened only from the powder-box,
After those many winters: on the steep
Of high-heeled shoes, and with the silken sweep
Of quaint brocade, and an arch smile that mocks
At Time's despite, thy lovely semblance walks,
This year, our continent from deep to deep
At numberless Centennial Tea-Parties,
With chicken-salad, coffee, chocolate,
For retrospective youth, whose bosoms swell
When they behold thee and thy pleasing freight,
With love of country, and each patriot sees
Thy charm in all that thou dost chronicle.

W. D. Howells.



13. Wyeth Farm.
Mrs. John Read.

15. Frost House.
Mrs. Austin.

17. Foxcraft.
Morse Estate.

19. Court House.
20. Church.

22. Hollis Hall.
23. Holden Chapel.

26. Parsonage.
27. Apthorp House.

THE CAMBRIDGE OF 1776.

SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF CAMBRIDGE FROM ITS SETTLEMENT IN 1631 TO 1776.

BY DAVID GREENE HASKINS, JR.

IN the year 1630, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Bay Company, a large fleet of English ships spread its sails for the shores of New England; and about one thousand colonists, with John Winthrop, the Governor, and Thomas Dudley, the Deputy-Governor of the Company, and other gentlemen of respectability and of influence in its councils, settled at Dorchester, Charlestown, Boston, Watertown, Roxbury, Medford, and Lynn.[1] The hitherto struggling Colony was thus placed on a secure foundation. After providing shelter for the winter, one of the earliest objects of care was to select a site for a fortified capital city, where the settlers might be safe from the attacks of their Indian neighbors and of possible foreign invaders. After many consultations, a spot was at last chosen near the Charles river, about a mile below Watertown, and on the 28th of December the Governor, Deputy-Governor, and all but two of the assistants, bound themselves to build houses there in the spring and to remove thither their ordnance and munition." Under such favorable auspices, early in 1631 the "Newe Towne" was begun. Houses were erected and a canal was made to connect the town with the river. But this prosperity was soon partially blighted. Amicable relations having been established with the neighboring Indians, the need of a fortified town was no longer strongly felt; most of the assistants failed to perform their agreement; and before winter the Governor, without consulting his associates, removed the frame of his unfinished house from Newtown to Boston, whose commercial facilities were greater, and whose people were anxious to retain him amongst them. Dudley resented this conduct, and it was probably one of the reasons which, the next year, induced him to tender a resignation of his office ; but he was finally reconciled to the Governor through the efforts of several of the ministers.

[1] Dudley's Letter to the Countess of Lincoln.

Boston became the capital, but Newtown was not abandoned, though Dudley and Bradstreet alone of the magistrates adhered to their agreement to settle there. The town was surrounded, in 1632, at the common expense, with a palisade and fosse about a mile and a half in length,[1] running along the north side of the present Cambridge Common, and enclosing over a thousand acres. Traces of the fosse were visible at the beginning of this century.[2]

In August, a small band of colonists from the vicinity of Braintree, Essex County, England, by order of the Court, removed to Newtown from Mount Wollaston, where they had begun to settle. A church was built with a bell, which afterwards gave place for a time to a drum as a means of summoning the people ; but the town had no settled minister until the arrival of the Rev. Thomas Hooker. This eminent divine, at the earnest solicitation of the Braintree people, his friends and former hearers, had left his church in Holland, whither he had fled from persecution for non-conformity in England. Passing through the latter country at considerable personal risk, he succeeded in eluding pursuit, and sailed for America, where he arrived, September 4, 1633, on the ship Griffin, together with his friend, the Rev. Samuel Stone, and the wealthy John Haynes. Mr. Hooker had been a preacher of great note at Chelmsford, near Braintree, in Essex, and fully sustained his reputation in this country, being styled by Cotton Mather, "the light of the Western churches." October 11, 1633, he and Mr. Stone were solemnly ordained pastor and teacher of the Newtown church, the eighth which was gathered in the Colony. It may be feared that his popularity might have been less, had he lived in a later age, for we read that on a Sunday afternoon, before Governor Winthrop and a very large congregation, he preached over two hours "to very good purpose."[3] Though numbering scarcely fifty families at this time,[4] it was not long before the Newtown people wearied of their narrow limits and complained that they had not sufficient meadow land for their cattle. After sending exploring parties to Agawam, Merrimack, and the Connecticut river, they asked leave, at the General Court sitting at Newtown, September, 1634, to remove to the last named region. The debate lasted several days. The petitioners pleaded, beside other arguments, "the strong bent of their spirits to remove." The opponents of the measure advanced considerations of expediency and religion against this "removing of a candlestick." The vote was taken. The magistrates and deputies, the two bodies composing the General Court, disagreed. The latter strenuously contested the right of the former to a

[1] Wood's New England's Prospect, p. 43.
[2] Holmes's History of Cambridge, p. 9, note.
[3] Winthrop's History of New England, vol. i. p. 304.
[4] Holmes's History of Cambridge, p. 10, note.

negative voice. The Court adjourned, and a special day of humiliation, in consequence of the difficulty, was kept throughout the Colony. The matter was temporarily settled by the consent of Mr. Hooker's people to remain and to receive grants of land on the south side of the Charles river.

They soon, however, became restless again, and, although at the General Court held at Newtown, May 6, 1635, John Haynes, one of their chief men, was elected governor, they resolved, apparently with the tacit consent of the Court, to follow "the strong bent of their spirits," and remove to the Connecticut, whither their neighbors of Dorchester and Watertown were also on the point of emigrating. They accordingly sold their estates to the Rev. Thomas Shepard and his company, who arrived at Boston in the ship Defence, October 3, 1635. This "holy, heavenly, sweet-affecting, and soul-ravishing minister,"[1] who had not yet completed his thirtieth year, had been a non-conformist clergyman in Essex County and elsewhere, and, after numerous perils by land and water, had succeeded in escaping from England, it is said in disguise and under an assumed name. He was accompanied by his stanch friend, the young and wealthy Roger Harlakenden, George Cook, afterwards captain of the Cambridge company, and some sixty others. This company settled at Newtown, and, February 1, 1636, organized a church with much solemnity. The following June, Mr. Hooker and his assistant, Mr. Stone, with their congregation of one hundred people, set out on foot through the wilderness for the Connecticut, a distance of one hundred miles, driving their cattle with them; and, after nearly a fortnight's journeying, reached their destination and founded a second Newtown, the modern Hartford.

A writer, who left America previous to Mr. Hooker's arrival in the country, describes the original Newtown as "one of the neatest and best compacted townes in New England, having many faire structures with many handsome contrived streets. The inhabitants most of them are very rich and well stored with cattell of all sorts. On the other side of the river lieth all their meadow and marsh-ground for hay."[2] A later writer, in 1686,[3] affirms that 'for handsomness and beauty" it "out-does Boston it self." The town was wealthy, paying, in the spring of 1636, the largest tax in the Colony.[4] From 1634 to 1636, while Dudley and Haynes occupied the governor's chair, the General Courts were held here, and in 1636 additional courts for the trial of cases were established here as well as at several other places. The town was laid out in squares. Its old market-place is the present Winthrop Square, where stood the house of Governor Haynes.[5] Dudley had built, on the west side of Water, now Dunster, Street, a house which had incurred the

[1] Johnson's Wonder-Working Providence in New England, p. 213.
[2] Wood's New England's Prospect (1634), p. 43.
[3] John Dunton's Letters from New England, p. 156.
[4] Records Massachusetts Bay Colony, vol. i. p. 166.
[5] Holmes's History of Cambridge, p. 10, note.

censure of Winthrop as too elegant in its finish for a struggling colony. Near it stood the church, while Bradstreet's house was in what was then Cow Yard Row. An official statement shows that, in 1635, after Shepard's arrival, there were eighty-five houses within the town limits.[2]

These limits were at first very narrow, and the town, in the quaint language of an ancient writer, resembled "a list cut off from the broad-cloath" of Charlestown and Watertown. Very early, however, — it is scarcely possible now to determine just when or how, — it acquired a large territory on the south side of the Charles river. The grant made by the General Court on condition that Mr. Hooker's company should remain, consisted chiefly of the land about Muddy river, the present Brookline, which, on breach of the condition, reverted to Boston. At the General Court, in March, 1636, it was agreed that the bounds of the town should extend eight miles into the country from the meeting-house (on Dunster Street), thus including half of the present town of Lexington.[4] In 1641, 1642, and 1644, the town received very large additional grants, consisting mainly of the territory then called Shawshin. At this period of its greatest size it seems to have extended in a curious irregular line from what was afterwards West Roxbury on the south to the Merrimack river on the north, and to have included the greater part, if not the whole, of Brighton, Newton, Cambridge, Arlington, Lexington, Bedford, Billerica, and probably Tewksbury, and portions of Belmont and Winchester. It should be remembered that the territory near Mount Auburn at this time belonged to Watertown, and that East Cambridge and Cambridgeport, now the most flourishing parts of the city, were then almost uninhabited farms and marshes. The line between Cambridge and Watertown was marked for some distance by a stone wall four feet high, with two gates at the highways, built in accordance with a vote of the proprietors of the town, May 29, 1671.[5]

May 29, 1655, with the consent of Cambridge, the great Shawshin grant became the township of Billerica. August 27, 1679, Cambridge Village, as it was called, was organized as a separate town, which later received the name of Newton. The next loss of territory was March 20, 1713, when the Cambridge Farms were set off and organized as Lexington. Little Cambridge and Menotomy (Brighton and Arlington) remained a part of the town until early in the present century.

The year of Mr. Hooker's departure, a theological controversy, originated by Mrs. Anne Hutchinson of Boston, began to create great agitation in the Colony. Mrs. Hutchinson's views were advocated by the Governor, Sir Henry Vane, by John Cotton, and by nearly the whole Boston church. The opposite party was headed by John Wilson, pastor of the church, and Win-

[1] Winthrop's History of New England, vol. i. p. 73.
[2] Town Records.
[3] Wonder Working Providence, p. 61.
[4] Hudson's History of Lexington, pp. 34 and 35, and note.
[5] Town Records.

hrop. Party feeling ran high, and at a session of the Court, held at Boston, March, 1637, it was voted, in spite of the Governor, who refused to put the uestion, that the next General Court, which was to elect officers for the ear, should be held in Newtown. The Court met, May 17th, in the open ir on the Newtown Common amid great excitement. Mrs. Hutchinson's dherents, we learn from an unfriendly pen,[1] were violent in their speeches, nd the two parties well-nigh came to blows. In the midst of the tumult Vilson climbed a tree, and thence addressed the people with marked suc- ess.[2] The elections were held. Mrs. Hutchinson's party were entirely efeated, and Winthrop was elected governor. August 30th, a synod, sum- noned by the ministers with the magistrates' consent for the settlement f the controversy, met in Mr. Shepard's church at Newtown. It included ll the ministers, the messengers of the various churches, and the magis- rates, and was presided over by Hooker and Bulkeley. This assembly sat wenty-four days, during which the tact and exertions of Governor Win- hrop were generally successful in maintaining harmony and good feeling, lthough some were "so obstreperous that the magistrates were constrained o interpose with their authority,"[3] which resulted in the withdrawal of some f the Boston people. The synod finally agreed in condemning almost unan- nously eighty-two opinions, "some blasphemous, others erroneous, and all nsafe;"[4] and also decided some other points of importance. The Gen- ral Court, at its next session, November, 1637, also held at Newtown, sum- noned Mrs. Hutchinson into its presence, and after a long examination anished her almost unanimously. It also banished, disfranchised, or dis- rmed, many of her adherents, and removed the powder and ammunition om Boston, the stronghold of her party, to Newtown and Roxbury.

During these exciting times, the first steps were taken toward the estab- shment of a college, and Newtown was selected for its site. Here, "at the id of a spacious plain more like a bowling-green than a wilderness,"[5] was uilt the first college in British America, which, in 1639, took the name of its rst benefactor, John Harvard. In May, 1638, the Court gave its sanction a change of name already made by popular usage,[6] and Newtown became ambridge, in honor of the great University where its own ministers, Hooker, tone, and Shepard, and many other leading men in the Colonies, had re- ived their education.

About the beginning of the year 1639, under the auspices of the magis- ates and elders, a printing-press, the first in the country north of Mexico, as established at Cambridge. For some time it was under the superin- ndence of the President, and its profits formed a part of the revenues of

[1] Winthrop's History of New England, vol. i. p. 220.
[2] Hutchinson's History of Massachusetts, vol. i. p. 62, note.
[3] Hubbard's History of New England, p. 302.
[4] Winthrop's History of New England, vol. i. p. 238.
[5] Wonder-Working Providence, p. 164.
[6] Records Massachusetts Bay Colony, vol. i. p. 180.

the college. It was early employed in printing the Bay Psalm Book, and later, Eliot's Indian Bible.

In 1643, there was a meeting in the college of all the ministers of the Colony, numbering about fifty, for the purpose of opposing certain incipien tendencies toward Presbyterianism. These distinguished men, during thei stay, were boarded at commons for the modest sum of sixpence a meal. Again, in 1645, July 1st, the ministers held a general meeting here for the purpose of revising certain theological works prepared by Hooker and others and designed to be printed in England.

September 1, 1646, at the instance of the General Court, a memorable synod, called together from all the united colonies to establish a system o church government and discipline, met in Cambridge. After three shor sessions, at very long intervals, it finally adjourned, in the summer o 1648, having unanimously adopted the Confession of Faith of the Westminster Assembly, and having framed a "Platform of Church Discipline, which, with little variation, formed the fundamental rule of the Congregational churches for more than a century. An interesting feature of thi synod was a sermon preached by John Eliot to the Indians, in their nativ language, in presence of the whole assembly and the legislature, June 1647. On the 28th of the previous October, at the Indian settlement o Nonantum, then within the limits of Cambridge, on the south side of th river, he had begun with good success his efforts to civilize and Christianiz the natives. The remains of the stone walls and ditches with which hi early converts surrounded their town, previous to their removal, in 1651, t Natick, were long visible. A few of the Indian youth were educated, an an Indian college was built at Cambridge, but was afterwards devoted t other purposes.

Meanwhile, urged by pecuniary embarrassments, Mr. Shepard's compan had been twice on the verge of following the example of their predecessor In 1640 and 1641, they seriously meditated an emigration to Mattabesett, o the Connecticut,[1] the modern Middletown, and a second scheme of migr tion, perhaps within the Plymouth limits, induced the General Court, Marc 1644, to make them a grant of land on condition of their remaining.[2]

Cambridge seems at this time to have had some commerce with foreig parts, and several of her ships are mentioned by early writers, notably o carrying fourteen guns, which, on a voyage to the Canaries, about the clo of the year 1644, fought nearly all day at close quarters and finally be off an Irish man-of-war of superior force.[3]

About the year 1650, a woman is said to have suffered death here for t crime of witchcraft, one of the earliest victims to that dreadful popular d lusion.[4] Ten years later, in 1660, Elizabeth Horton, a Quaker, we

[1] Allen's Life of Shepard, pp. 243–245.
[2] Hudson's History of Lexington, p. 17. Records Massachusetts Bay Colony, vol. ii. p. 62.
[3] Winthrop's History of New England, vol. ii. p. 310.
[4] Hutchinson's History of Massachusetts, vol. ii. p. 22.

through the streets proclaiming that the Lord was coming with fire and sword to plead with the people.[1] An amusing instance of the paternal system of government adopted by the Puritans, is afforded by the action of the selectmen of Cambridge, February 14, 1676, appointing four persons "to have inspection into families that there be no bye drinking or any misdemeanor whereby sin is committed, and persons from their houses unseasonably." [2]

July 27, 1660, immediately on their arrival in America, Colonels Goffe and Whalley, the regicide judges, took up their abode in Cambridge, where they received a cordial welcome and remained till February 26th, when they fled to Connecticut. Alarmed by the distant mutterings of the devastating storm of Indian war, which, in 1675, burst on the Colony, the Cambridge militia began the erection of a stockade for the defence of the town ; [3] but Philip's death prevented its completion.

Through the earlier part of the eighteenth century, the history of Cambridge presents little worthy of note. The General Court was several times held here, usually to escape the small-pox prevailing in Boston ; once, in 1729, in consequence of a dispute with Governor Burnett. On one of these occasions, in 1764, Harvard Hall, where they sat, was consumed by fire, on the night of January 24th, with the philosophical apparatus and the valuable library of the college, including all but one of the books bequeathed by John Harvard.

In 1740, George Whitefield preached here more than once, addressing himself in the most direct and unsparing manner to the students and tutors. In 1749, a female slave was burned at the usual place of execution in Cambridge, for the crime of poisoning her master.[4]

June 16, 1769, the General Court was adjourned to Cambridge by Governor Bernard, in consequence of the unwillingness of the members to transact business in Boston while the town was held and the very state-house menaced by English troops. The next year, Lieutenant-Governor Hutchinson, in accordance with instructions from England, summoned the General Court to meet at Cambridge, March 15th. A long struggle ensued between the legislature and the executive. The former offered repeated and vigorous but ineffectual remonstrances against the removal of the Court from Boston, and in September, 1770, observed a day of solemn prayer and humiliation, at which the two Cambridge ministers were requested to perform the religious exercises. It was not until June 13, 1772, that the Governor consented that the Court should be adjourned to Boston.

In the year 1761, at the instance of several wealthy gentlemen, an Episcopal church was established in Cambridge, under the charge of the Rev.

[1] Hutchinson's History of Massachusetts, vol. i. p. 187.
[2] Town Records.
[3] Records of Massachusetts Bay Colony, vol. vi. p. 89.
[4] Drake's Historic Fields and Mansions of Middlesex, p. 170.

East Apthorp. He was received in no friendly spirit by the Congregational ministers, and in a few years sought a more agreeable field of labor in England. The breaking out of the war drove his successor, the Rev. Winwood Serjeant and his congregation of wealthy loyalists from the town, and the church was closed. In the agitations preceding the Revolution, Cambridge in spite of these same numerous and influential loyalists, ardently espoused the popular cause. The people "discovered a glorious spirit, like men determined to be free." In 1765, October 14th, they adopted patriotic resolutions against the Stamp Act. In 1770, they tolled their bells on the burial day of the Boston rioters killed by the troops. November 26, 1773, they passed energetic resolutions against the tax on tea, expressing their willingness to join with Boston and other towns, on the shortest notice, to deliver themselves and their posterity from slavery.[1]

September 1, 1774, a military detachment sent by General Gage seized and carried off a quantity of powder from Charlestown, and two small field pieces from Cambridge. The news spreading rapidly roused the neighboring country, and the following day an excited multitude from the surrounding towns poured into Cambridge, and took possession of the Common. They compelled Judges Danforth and Lee, two of the mandamus councillors recently appointed in violation of the charter, to announce from the court-house steps their resignation of their seats at the council-board, and they exacted pledges of fidelity to the charter from the High Sheriff and County Clerk. At the request of Lieutenant-Governor Oliver, who hastened to Boston to assure General Gage of the respectable and orderly character of the assemblage, no troops were sent out against them, otherwise the Revolution might have had an earlier beginning. In the afternoon, re-enforced by fresh arrivals, they surrounded Oliver's house, three to four thousand strong, a quarter part in arms, and, by violent threats, compelled him to sign a paper resigning his seat as president of the council. After which they peaceably withdrew.[2]

October 17th, the first Provincial Congress, presided over by John Hancock, met by adjournment from Concord, in the First Church, where it continued to hold its sessions till its dissolution, December 10th. Here, too, the Committee of Safety held, apparently, its first meeting, November 20, as well as many meetings the following year.

The annals of Cambridge for 1775 are a part of our national history, and can here be only briefly referred to. February 1st, the second Provincial Congress met in the church, but on the 16th adjourned to Concord. Cambridge bore its part in the fighting and the losses of the memorable 19th April, and its selectmen made an ineffectual effort to check the advance of Lord Percy's re-enforcements by taking up the planks of the Brighton bridge. After the battle, the town became one of the chief rendezvous for

[1] Town Records.

[2] American Archives, 4th series, vol. i. pp. 762–769.

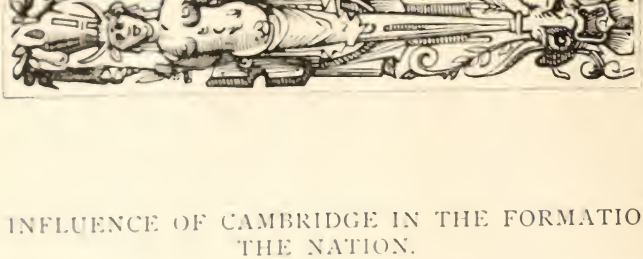
e rapidly-gathering patriot forces, and the deserted halls of the college, id houses of the loyalists, and even Christ Church itself, were occupied for ilitary purposes. Here was probably the spot where, early in May, were ected the first of the American fortifications. Here General Artemas

Congregational Church.

Ward, commander-in-chief of the Massachusetts troops, fixed his head-uarters. Here General Washington assumed command of the American my, and here the head-quarters and centre of the army remained during e siege. In the midst of such unwonted scenes of military activity, the ventful year 1776 dawned on the hitherto peaceful town.



THE INFLUENCE OF CAMBRIDGE IN THE FORMATION OF THE NATION.

BY ANDREW P. PEABODY, D. D.

CAMBRIDGE was the first capital of our infant Republic, the cradle of our nascent liberty, the hearth of our kindling patriotism. Before the 3d of July, 1775, there were tumults, conflicts, bold plans, rash enterprises; but there was no co-ordinating and controlling will, purpose, or authority. On and from that day the Colonies were virtually one people. Before, they had nothing in common but their grievances. They were as yet British provinces, — though wrenching the cords that held them, still undetached, and with no mode of action upon or with one another. By adopting the army and choosing its head they performed their first act, not of alliance, but of organic unity, and became a nation unawares, while they thought themselves still wronged and suppliant dependencies of the British crown. They thus decided the question between a worse than unsuccessful rebellion and revolution.

That the rebellion, as such, would have been an utter failure, is only too certain. The American party in England had on its side eloquence indeed, and wisdom, but neither numerical force in Parliament, nor the power to mollify ministerial obstinacy, or to penetrate with a sense of right the crass stupidity on the throne. Boston was held by disciplined, thoroughly armed, and well-fed troops, under officers of approved skill and prowess, strongly entrenched and fortified at accessible points, and sustained by a formidable naval force. Hardly one in fifty of the colonial army had had any experience in war, and I doubt whether there was a single man among them, officer or private, who was a soldier by profession. They had come from the farm and the forge, with such arms and equipments as they could bring; they had no bureau of supply, no military chest, no organized commissariat, and their stock of ammunition was so slender that it was ordered by the Provincial Congress that no salute should be fired on the reception of the Commander-in-chief. They were from four different provinces, under as many generals, with sectional jealousies which the common cause could hardly keep at bay; and harmonious counsels could be maintained or expected only and scarcely at moments of imminent peril. At Bunker Hill they had shown both their strength and their weakness, their unsurpassed courage and their poverty of resource. Superior in the conflict, overwhelming the enemy with the shame and disaster of a signal defeat, they had been compelled to yield the ground on which they had won imperishable glory, and to see the heights they had so bravely defended occupied by a hostile battery. They held Boston beleaguered by the prestige of that day, too feeble to press the siege, yet, as they had well proved, too strong to be dislodged and scattered, but by the disintegrating elements in their own unorganized body. These elements were already at work, and the secession of even a single regiment would have been the signal for speedy dissolution and submission to the royal government.

Washington Elm.

This precarious condition of affairs was beyond the remedial authority of the individual provinces. Massachusetts could choose a general for her own troops, but could not place the forces of New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Rhode Island under his control. Still less could any efficient system of sustenance or armament have been arranged by separate legislatures. A central authority alone could carry forward the resistance so nobly begun. The Continental Congress would in vain have passed patriotic resolutions, protests against tyranny, votes of sympathy; in vain would they have roused popular indignation and multiplied centres of resistance through the land. The one decisive act in the struggle, the seal of what had bee achieved, the presage and pledge of all that should ensue in the comin years, was the taking command of the American army at Cambridge, b Washington.

Cambridge was for obvious geographical reasons the only place where th provincial troops could have their head-quarters, — lying near enough to th enemy to watch and check his movements, yet protected from sudden or in sidious attack by the intervention of the then unbridged arm of the se which separates it from Boston. There was, at the same time, an intrinsi fitness that the opening scenes of the great drama should be enacted here where so many of the leaders in counsel and arms had learned to loathe op pression and to hold the cause of liberty sacred.

From its earliest days our university had always been on the side of free dom. Its first two presidents were far in advance of their times in thei views of the right of the individual man to unrestricted liberty of thought opinion, speech, and action. Increase Mather, when president, took the lea in the opposition to the tyrannical acts of Andros and Randolph, sailed fo England as the unofficial agent of the aggrieved colonists, was appointed t an official agency on the news of the revolution of 1688, bore an importan part in the construction of the new provincial charter and in securing its ac ceptance, and nominated to the royal court the governor, council, and prin cipal officers under it. His successors were of a like spirit, and there is o record no instance in which the college succumbed to usurpation, stooped t sycophancy, or maintained other than an erect position before the emissarie of the royal government. The culture of the students was in great par classical, and in the last century the classics were the text-books of a lovers of freedom. A sceptical criticism had not then cast doubt on any o the stories of ancient heroism, nor had a minute analysis laid bare the ex cesses and defects of the early republics, whose statesmen and warriors wer deemed the peerless models of patriotic virtue, and whose orators thrille the hearts of their New England readers, as they had the Athenian demos the senate in the capitol, or the dense masses of Roman citizens in th forum.

Almost all the Massachusetts clergy, perhaps the major part of those o New England, had been educated here. The Tories among them were ver few, and nearly the whole of their number were ardent patriots. The pulpi then sustained in affairs of public moment the part which is now borne b the daily press; its utterances during the eventful years of our life-struggl had no uncertain sound; and the champions, deeds of prowess, and war lyrics of the Hebrew Scriptures gave the frequent key-note to sermon prayer, and sacred song.

Among the pioneers and guiding spirits of the Revolution, who were graduates of the college, when I have named the Adamses, Otises, Quincys Warrens, Pickering, Hancock, Trumbull, Ward, Cushing, Bowdoin, Phillips have but given you specimens of the type and temper of those who for any years had gone from Cambridge to fill the foremost places of trust and fluence throughout and beyond our Commonwealth. That they carried ith them hence their liberal views of government and of the rights of man, e well know in the case of those of whose lives we have the record. Thus e find John Adams, just after graduating here, more than twenty years efore the declaration of independence, writing to a friend his anticipations r America, not only of her freedom from European sway, but of her be- oming the chief seat of empire for the world. Year after year, on the ommencement platform in the old parish church, had successive ranks of arnest young men rehearsed to greedy ears the dream of liberty which they ledged faith and life to realize.

In the successive stages of the conflict of the Colonies with the mother ountry, the college uniformly committed itself unequivocally on the patriotic de. When the restrictions on the colonial trade called forth warm expres- ons of resentment, the senior class unanimously resolved to take their egrees in what must then have been exceedingly rude apparel, — home- un and home-made cloth. When tea was proscribed by public sentiment, nd some few students persisted in bringing it into commons, the faculty rbade its use, alleging that it was a source of grief and uneasiness to many f the students, and that banishing it was essential to harmony and peace ithin the college walls. After the day of Lexington and Concord, all four f the then existing college buildings were given up for barracks, and the resident's house for officers' quarters. When the Commander-in-chief was xpected, this house was designated for his use, with the reservation of a ngle room for President Langdon's own occupancy. Though the few re- aining students were removed to Concord, the President, an ardent patriot, eems to have still resided here, or at least to have spent a large portion of is time near the troops ; for we find frequent traces of his presence among em, and on the eve of the battle of Bunker Hill he officiated as their chap- in. In connection with the prevailing spirit of the university, it is worthy f emphatic statement that the Commander-in-chief was the first person who ere received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

To Harvard graduates the country was indebted for the choice of the il- istrious chieftain. The earliest mention that we can find of Washington's ame in this connection is in a letter of James Warren to John Adams bear- g date the 7th of May. Adams seems at once to have regarded him as e only man fitted for this momentous service. Though the formal nomi- ation was made by Mr. Johnson of Maryland, Mr. Adams on a previous ay first designated Washington as "a gentleman whose skill and expe- ence as an officer, whose independent fortune, great talents, and excellent niversal character would command the approbation of all America, and nite the cordial exertions of all the Colonies better than any other person n the Union." There were, however, objections on sectional grounds and personal ambitions that required the most delicate treatment, and it was mainly in consequence of Mr. Adams's strong will, untiring effort, and skilful handling of opposing wishes and claims, that the final ballot was unanimous. On the 5th of June the election was made. It was formally announced to Washington by Hancock, the President of Congress, and was accepted on the spot.

The commander, impressed with the imminence of the crisis, denied himself the sad privilege of a farewell in person to his own household, took leave of his wife in a letter equally brave and tender, and on the 21st commenced his northward journey. Twenty miles from Philadelphia he met a courier with tidings of the battle of Bunker Hill. Eagerly inquiring as to the details of the transaction, and learning the promptness, skill, and courage that had made the day forever memorable, he exclaimed, "The liberties of the country are safe!" A deputation from the Provincial Congress met him at Springfield, and volunteer cavalcades gave him honorable attendance from town to town, till, on the 2d of July, he arrived at Watertown, received and returned the congratulatory address of the Congress there assembled, and was then escorted by a company of horse and a goodly body of mounted civilians to the president's house, now known as Wadsworth House. The rapid journey on horseback from Philadelphia to Cambridge, and that in part over rough roads, — an enterprise beyond the easy conception of our time, — must have rendered the brief repose of that midsummer night essential to the prestige of the morrow, when on the first impressions of the hour may have been poised the destiny of the nation.

Old President's House.

There were reasons why Washington not only might have been, but uld inevitably have been ill received, had he not been made to win men's nfidence and love. Several of the officers already on the ground had own their capacity for great things, and had their respective circles of mirers, who were reluctant to see them superseded by a stranger; and d not the officers themselves manifested a magnanimity equal to their urage, the camp would have been already distracted by hostile factions. ien, too, the Virginian and New England character, manners, style of eech, modes of living, tastes, aptitudes, had much less in common at that ne of infrequent intercourse than half a century later, when, as we well ow, apart from political divergence, mere social differences were sufficient create no little mutual repugnancy. Washington was also well known to an Episcopalian, and Episcopacy, from the first offensive on Puritan soil, s never more abhorred than now, when its Northern professors, with rdly an exception, were openly hostile to the cause of the people,— when Cambridge almost every conspicuous dwelling from Fresh Pond to the man House in Cambridgeport had been the residence of a refugee royalist ember of the English Church.

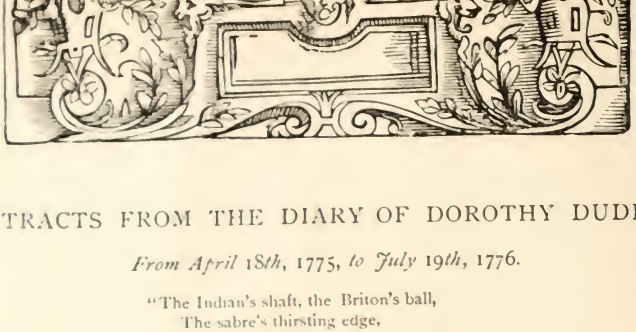
The morning of the 3d of July witnessed on the Cambridge Common, d at every point of view in and upon the few surrounding houses, such a ıltitude of men, women, and children as had never been gathered there fore, and perhaps never afterwards assembled until its hundredth anni- rsary was celebrated. Never was the advent or presence of mortal man more complete and transcendent triumph. Majestic grace and sweet nignity were blended in countenance and mien. He looked at once the ro, patriot, sage. With equal dignity and modesty he received the thunders acclamation, in which every voice bore part. His first victory, the pres- e of which forsook him not for a moment during the weary years that lowed, was already gained when under the ancient elm he drew his ord as commander-in-chief. He had conquered thousands of hearts, that mained true to him to their last throb. The wife of John Adams writes his appearance at that moment, "Those lines of Dryden instantly oc- rred to me, —

> Mark his majestic fabric! He's a temple
> Sacred by birth, and built by hands divine;
> His soul's the deity that lodges there;
> Nor is the pile unworthy of the God.'"



EXTRACTS FROM THE DIARY OF DOROTHY DUDLEY.

From April 18th, 1775, to July 19th, 1776.

"The Indian's shaft, the Briton's ball,
The sabre's thirsting edge,
The hot shell, shattering in its fall,
The bayonet's rending wedge, —
Here scattered death; yet, seek the spot,
No trace thine eye can see,
No altar, — and they need it not
Who leave their children free!"

O. W. Holmes.

CAMBRIDGE, April 18th, 1775. — To-day nine Redcoats stopped at Bradish tavern for dinner and then galloped on toward Lexington. I wonder what mischief is in the wind now! Mr. Hancock and Mr. Samuel Adams, are staying with Mr. Clark in Lexington, and these officers may be spies in search of them. We are on the alert, knowing that at any moment the war cloud may burst.[1]

April 20th. — It has come. The long expected blow has been struck, and by the British arm. How can I nerve myself to write of the horrors of yesterday; but I will do it.

At midnight of Tuesday we were awakened by the ringing of bells and beating of drums and the hurried tread of men arming for battle. The air was filled with cries of frightened women and children. "The regulars are out. To arms!" was the shout which, with lightning speed, went from mouth to mouth. Then we knew that the purposes of General Gage had ripened into deeds, and war was fairly upon us. Our minute men were ready for action, and as the sun arose set off in the direction of Lexington, where the British troops had gone. For us at home there was the most terrible suspense to be endured. At noon came a body of Redcoats, led by Lord Percy, over the bridge from Boston, to re-enforce the troops which went through our town Tuesday night. It was not till toward evening that our anxiety and suspense could be relieved by any certain news. Then the King's troops were retreating in most ignominious haste before the pursuing militia of Lexington, Concord, and Cambridge

[1] Though Miss Dudley carefully attributes her interest in public events to "patriotism," the exactness and promptness of her information suggest that some gallant officer gave her intelligence of his movements, and that we owe her details rather to the tender passion than to the love of country. — E.

s they ran over the road they had so proudly marched over the night be-re, the slaughter among them was terrible. Several of our brave Camidge men are killed. Mrs. Hicks sent her eldest boy to look for his

General Joseph Warren.[1]

ther as night came on.[2] He found him lying dead by the roadside, and ear him Mr. Moses Richardson and Mr. William Marcy.[3] These three

[1] The face in this portrait is from an engraving after Copley.

[2] John Hicks lived in a house that is still standing on the corner of Winthrop and Dunster streets. It is supposed that he was engaged in the Boston "Tea Party." He was absent from home on that night, and is said to have had tea in his clothing upon his return. — Ed.

[3] A monument to these men stands now in the church-yard, near Christ Church. — Ed.

were brought home and hastily buried in one common grave in the churchyard. Ah, the sorrows of that night! How near it brought war to our doors, this first burial of victims of British tyranny.[1] It was no time for funeral ceremonies; and as the terrified and sorrowing friends stood around the rude grave in which was put all that was mortal of these brave men, Dr. Warren tried to comfort them with hopeful words. "It will soon be over," he said, "then rightful honors will be paid to these who fell in the defence of our country." I cannot forget it. The lurid glare of the torches, the group in the graveyard, the tender but hurried burial without service or even coffins, and Elias Richardson's act of filial love in carefully spreading the cape of his father's overcoat upon the dead man's face, lest the coarse earth should fall directly upon it. Dr. Warren himself, they say, had a very narrow escape in the affray. He ran recklessly into it when the British were retreating, and a bullet whizzed past his head, taking off one of the side curls.

April 21st. — Our little town is the seat of war. An army is gathering in our midst in response to the call of the Committee of Safety. Yesterday, immediately after the affair at Lexington and Concord, a proclamation to the Colonies was issued, urging them to do all in their power to raise an army. "Our all is at stake. Death and devastation are the certain consequences of delay. Every moment is infinitely precious. An hour lost may deluge your country in blood and entail perpetual slavery upon the fate of our posterity that may survive the carnage." But the Colonies have not waited for the call. One spirit animates all — the determination to stand by our country in its hour of need — and the universal cry is Liberty or Death. Volunteers come from all quarters, many with nothing but the clothes on their backs, no money, no provisions. Our houses are thrown open to accommodate as far as possible the great throng of men who have rushed to the cause of liberty. General Ward has taken the chief command and is doing his best to bring order out of this chaos. The Committee of Safety have taken up their quarters at Mr. Hastings's house,[2] and General Ward is also there.

Orders are issued that the college be removed to Concord, and the students are going; the library has already been partly carried to Andover. The college buildings are to be used as barracks for the soldiers. The Common is the rendezvous for military; and a busy scene it is, with its groups of excited minute-men and thousand signs of warlike preparations. A great

[1] "With heart and hand they wrought
According to their village light;
'T was for the Future that they fought,
Their rustic faith in what was right.
Upon earth's tragic stage they burst
Unnumbered in the humble sock;
There's the fifth act; the curtain first Rose long ago on Charles's block." — Lowell.

[2] Known as the Holmes house. — Ed.

many of our townspeople have run away, as this influx of soldiers has come. Tory Row is nearly deserted. The widow of Major Henry Vassall has left her house and sought a place of safety. Colonel Stark has her property in charge. All that cannot be made of use to our army is sent to Boston. The barns will be used to store forage for our cavalry horses. Mr. John Borland has abandoned his home [1] and it is taken by the Committee of Safety. Major Phipps, too,[2] thinks discretion the better part of valor, and has departed. We have but little of the Tory element among us now. The Tories who remain are lukewarm in their principles.

April 24th. — Boston is in great distress, the very centre, as it is, of the war; in the hands of a cruel and insolent soldiery, and deprived of its supplies from the surrounding country. We cannot realize how hard a life its poor besieged inhabitants must lead.

April 25th. — Good news for Boston sufferers ! General Gage has proposed a treaty, as much for his own safety and that of his troops, as from any kindlier motives, and agrees "that upon the inhabitants in general lodging their arms in Faneuil Hall, or any other convenient place, under the care of the selectmen, marked with the names of the respective owners, that all such inhabitants as are inclined may depart from the town, with their families and effects, and those who remain may depend on his protection, and that the arms aforesaid, at a suitable time, will be returned to the owners." He promises that the poor shall be provided for, and asks "that those persons in the country who might incline to move into Boston with their effects, might have liberty to do so without molestation." This proposal is gladly accepted, and the conditions agreed to as just and reasonable.

April 29th. — The road to Roxbury is a busy scene, covered, as it is, with an ever lengthening procession of voluntary exiles from Boston, and crowded with loyal subjects of the King, anxious to hide themselves under the protecting care of his Majesty's troops. The Provincial Congress has ordered that provision be made for the Boston exiles in the villages further inland in our Colony, and as many as five thousand are distributed among different hospitable towns. Our army is in a most pitiable condition. There is great and terrible want of powder, muskets, and other necessaries. Congress has offered a reward for the discovery of the best mode of making saltpetre, and all possible efforts are being made to supply the need of clothing, tents, and fire-arms. But I am sure we need have no fears that these raw recruits, as they seem by the side of the disciplined army of his Majesty, will not hold their own and do and dare even to death in defence of our country's liberty. We have had proof of their bravery in our late French war, and their training then and since is not to be despised, as the Redcoats found out to their cost at Lexington and Concord. Our officers, too are men of skill and experience.

[1] The Apthorp House. — Ed.

[2] He occupied a large mansion on the present Arrow Street. — Ed

Every one knows that "Putnam dares to lead where any dare to follow" and the very name of "Old Put" is a synonym for bravery. Then there Prescott, who "will never be taken alive" by the enemy, the veteran Star and Ward and Pomeroy. With these we have Dr. Warren, a host himself, the President of our Committee of Safety and also of Congres He is a wonder to us, so full of energy and enthusiasm, always awake the necessities of the country, and with such unbounded influence over th soldiers. He it was who despatched the messengers to alarm the sleepir country that memorable night when the British slipped away so secretly their errand of mischief. While the lanterns hung from the belfry of th North Church in Boston, he said to a friend as he left the town, "Keep up brave heart; they have begun it. That either party may do. We shall en it; that only one can do." And Warren's name is only one of a list to whic Hancock, Church, Devens, Orne, White, Palmer, and Watson belong.

May 20th. — Congress has met in Philadelphia and appointed Mr. Hancoc president in place of Mr. Peyton Randolph resigned. Mr. Hancock is ver popular, and his vast wealth and influence are all used in the interests of ou country. It is said that when the question was discussed in the North En Club of Mechanics, of which he was an active member, how best to drive th British troops from Boston, he cried: "Burn Boston and make John Han cock a beggar if the public good requires it." So we have a patriot at th head of our Congress.

News has come of the capture of Ticonderoga on the 10th of this mont by Colonel Ethan Allen and the Green Mountain Boys. It was accon plished without loss of life on either side, by the desperate daring of th hardy mountaineers. They rushed into the fort in the early morning frightened the garrison by the Indian war-whoop, and were led by the a tounded sentry, who made but feeble resistance, to the apartment of th commander. "Come forth instantly or I will sacrifice the whole garrison!" was the thundering command which brought him to the door. "Deliver me the fort instantly," said Allen. "By what authority?" asked the astor ished commander. "In the name of the great Jehovah and the Continenta Congress!" was the reply. After a short hesitation, he surrendered th fortress, ordering the garrison to parade without arms. This is a valuabl acquisition, the fort containing a large number of cannon, stores, and sma arms.

Dr. Franklin has arrived from England and is appointed Postmaste General, also a member of the Committee of Safety and of the Continenta Congress. Our councils will gain strength by the presence of this grea man. It is such a privilege to have his wisdom and experience employe for the good of our Colonies.

May 23d. — So many of the Boston people have removed from the tow that General Gage has become alarmed, thinking that all the patriots wi go, and then there will be no restraint upon our troops, to assure the safet the besieged town. He has broken his promise and forbidden "all merchandise, provisions, and medicine" from passing into the country, and guards are appointed "to examine all trunks, boxes, beds, and everything else to be carried out." Passes, too, are refused now, and many who had procured them are obliged to go without their property, and in several instances families are cruelly divided, and unprotected women and children left with no means of support. Their condition must be wretched indeed!

May 26th. — A re-enforcement from England for the Redcoats, making their army count up to as many as ten thousand men. They are jubilant over this new force, which brings with it Generals Sir William Howe, Clinton, and Burgoyne.

June 13th. — General Gage has issued a proclamation beginning: "Whereas the infatuated multitudes, who have long suffered themselves to be conducted by certain well-known incendiaries and traitors, in a fatal progression of crimes against the constitutional authority of the state, have at length proceeded to avowed rebellion, and the good effects which were expected to arise from the patience and lenity of the King's government have been often frustrated, and are now rendered hopeless, by the influence of the same evil counsels, it only remains for those who are entrusted with the supreme rule, as well for the punishment of the guilty, as the protection of the well affected, to prove that they do not bear the sword in vain." He then goes on to declare martial law and to pronounce those in arms "to be rebels and traitors," and offers pardon to all who will return to loyalty with exception of Samuel Adams and John Hancock, "whose offences are of too flagitious a nature to admit of any other consideration than that of condign punishment." This is an honor many a patriot would gladly risk his life to receive, and only serves to strengthen the opposition and weaken the cord which binds our Colonies to old England.

June 15th. — I heard to-day that when the three British generals with the re-enforcement were sailing into Boston harbor they met a packet coming out, and General Burgoyne asked of the skipper, "What news is there?" The reply was that Boston was surrounded by ten thousand country people. "How many regulars in Boston?" was his next question. "Five thousand." "What!" said the British officer. "Ten thousand peasants keep five thousand King's troops shut up! Well, let us get in, and we 'll soon find room."

June 16th. — Colonel Prescott is ordered to be ready with a thousand men this evening to parade on the Common before marching for Charlestown. The men are all farmers, and have no uniform, and no arms except fowling-pieces without bayonets, and carry in horns and pouches their small supply of powder and bullets. Colonel Prescott was dressed in simple blue with three-cornered hat, his tall, commanding figure erect with courage, his eye beaming with enthusiasm. At a signal there was a profound silence, while President Langdon, who is their chaplain pro. tem., offered an earnest and touching prayer for the safety of these brave men, as they go up to battle with the enemy.[1] At nine o'clock they marched, two sergeants carrying dark lanterns in front, and in the rear the tools for throwing up entrenchments. The soldiers are ignorant of the object of their march, and will not be told till they reach its end. Now they have gone and we are left in suspense. What will be the result? We can only echo President Langdon's prayer: "Go with them, O, Our Father, keep them in the hollow of Thy hand, cover them with Thy protecting care, and bring them back to us victorious."

Saturday, June 17th. — We were in great anxiety to know the result of last night's march, when soon after dinner the bells began to ring, the drum beat to arms, and there was great confusion and noise. Adjutants galloped here and there, crying, "Turn out, turn out; the enemy 's all landed at Charlestown." Captain Putnam brought orders from his father to all the Connecticut troops to march immediately to Bunker Hill, to the relief of Colonel Prescott. Captain Chester's company from Wethersfield, which is quartered in Christ Church, and all of Old Put's soldiers in town, marched immediately, and General Warren, who arrived this morning from Watertown, has gone to the field of battle. We can hear the booming of the cannon and see the smoke arising from Charlestown, which the British have set on fire. It is a terrific battle. Our noble men defend their own works gallantly and will not yield, we know, till the last moment. It is feared that the want of ammunition will force them to retreat before the greater numbers of the enemy.

June 18th. — How can I write of the great and terrible loss which has come to us in the death of our beloved Dr. Warren. Yes, he is killed, pierced through the brain by a British bullet, and left dead on the field. When he was hurrying to the battle, and some one warned him to spare himself, he replied: "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori." At Bunker Hill, though tendered the command by both Putnam and Prescott, he declined, and took his place with the common soldiers, musket in hand, to do his part in defending the hill. When they were driven to surrender, he was the last to leave the ramparts, and fell bravely fighting. Many others of our brave men are gone, but none so valuable to the country as General Warren. He was appointed major-general only three days ago. Our enemies rejoice at our loss (and well they may), but their victory is a dear one to them, and one they will not care to buy again at the same price. Eleven hundred of the choicest men, including a great many officers, is no small loss, when they receive in exchange only a little hill overlooking Boston. One hundred and forty-five are killed, and three hundred and four wounded among our noble soldiers. It really is wonderful how a small body of undisciplined farmers could stand so long against an army of English regulars. It is owing to the ersonal courage and patriotism of every individual soldier, as well as their in-epid leadership ; and the great caution exercised in the use of powder, every rain of which served its purpose. Old Put, just before the battle, said : Powder is scarce, my men, and must not be wasted. Don't fire at the en-my till you see the whites of their eyes — then fire low, aim at their waist-ands. You are all marksmen, and can kill a squirrel at a hundred yards. eserve your fire, and the enemy is destroyed. Aim at the handsome coats - pick out the commanders." Colonel Stark says that " the dead lay as ick as sheep in a fold," on the new-mown hay which covered Bunker Hill. ur brave men have freely given their lives for their country, and convinced e world that we, as a people, are in earnest and ready to die for our cause. r. Franklin says : " Americans will fight ; England has lost her Colonies rever."

[1] Authorities do not agree as to the precise position occupied by the President when offering the prayer. — Ed.

June 19th. — It is feared that the British will follow up their victory and lly forth into the surrounding country, and perhaps attack our camps. eneral Putnam is busy throwing up entrenchments on Prospect Hill, work-g day and night, that he may be ready to oppose their progress, while forts nd earthworks are building almost by magic around our town.

June 22d. — Our poor wounded men are coming in wagons to the hospitals at are improvised in town. Colonel Phipps's, and Major Henry Vassall's ouses, and, further up Tory Row, Lieutenant-Governor Oliver's, and Mr. eorge Ruggles's, are used for[1] their accommodation. We are doing our est to provide lint and bandages for them. Congress has appointed a day f fasting and prayer, that the battle of Bunker Hill, may, by God's bless-g, be followed by great success to our arms. Dr. Appleton preached last abbath, a most stirring sermon. Many of the soldiers from camp were church. And from the hospitals they came too, here and there one whose juries are light enough to permit him to be out.

June 26th. — Our army at last is to have a commander-in-chief. Our ongress at Philadelphia has appointed Colonel George Washington of Vir-nia, " General and Commander-in-chief of the Army of the United Colo-es, and all the forces now raised or to be raised by them." He is to come mediately to camp to take command, and is now on his way. The Pro-ncial Congress at Watertown has resolved that the president's house, with e exception of one room, reserved by the President for his own use, be ken, cleared, prepared and furnished for the reception of General Wash-gton and General Lee. The appointment of General Washington is very opular. They say he is a man in every way fitted for this position, and his ection is unanimous.

July 3d. — General Washington is here. Yesterday he arrived, by way of Watertown, where he was received by Congress with a congratulatory ad-ess, and escorted to Cambridge by a troop of light horse. He went imme-ately to his quarters at the president's house. It was just as we were returning from church, and our curiosity to see the man of whom we have heard so much was satisfied. He is a large man, tall and well-proportioned, his face noble in its suggestion of strength, and dignity, and modesty. Our expectations are more than realized. His appearance is one to inspire confidence and love, and to make us grateful for the possession of such a chief. To-day he formally took command, under one of the grand old elms on the Common. It was a magnificent sight. The majestic figure of the General, mounted upon his horse beneath the wide-spreading branches of the patriarch tree;[1] the multitude thronging the plain around, and the houses filled with interested spectators of the scene, while the air rung with shouts of enthusiastic welcome, as he drew his sword, and thus declared himself Commander-in-chief of the Continental army. He will find his task a hard one, that of making an army out of the rude material gathered from all parts of our Colonies. General Ward, who already commands the troops around Boston, Colonel Charles Lee, who has resigned his commission in the King's service, General Philip Schuyler of New York, and Israel Putnam, "Old Put," are appointed major-generals. These all will surely find their hands full of work, in putting this body of fifteen thousand men into readiness for war, there is so much confusion in camp, so little discipline, and such terrible want of supplies of every kind. And this want must be kept an utter secret from the enemy in Boston. General Washington's staff consists of Major Thomas Mifflin of Philadelphia, first aid-de-camp, Major John Trumbull, son of Governor Trumbull of Connecticut, second aid-de-camp, Colonel Joseph Reed of Philadelphia, private secretary, and Horatio Gates, adjutant-general. Major Trumbull is quite a clever artist, and gained the favor of the Commander-in-chief by a very correct drawing of the enemy's works in Boston. He is a young man of fine appearance and abilities. Major Mifflin is a universal favorite, full of activity and enthusiasm. Colonel Reed is a gentleman of rich culture, and invaluable to Washington as his confidential clerk. General Gates is popular and useful.

[1] The Lowell house and the Wells house. — Ed.

July 10th.—General Washington is a most wonderful commander. His personal influence is unbounded. There is something magnetic about him drawing from others their fullest confidence. He is most conscientious in his discharge of every duty, and is accomplishing miracles among the soldiers.

The army is besieging Boston from all the surrounding country, being stationed in a semicircle from Charlestown to Dorchester, eight or nine miles. Colonel Prescott is entrenched in the woods between Cambridge and Lechmere's Point, and "Old Put" is at Prospect Hill. He has raised the Connecticut flag on the ramparts. On one side the banner has the motto, "An Appeal to Heaven," and on the other side the three vines, the armorial

[1] "Under the brave old tree
One father gathered in arms, and swore
They would follow the sign their banners bore,
And fight till the land was free."—Dr. Holmes.

arings of that Colony, with the legend, "Qui Transtulit Sustinet." This s thrown to the air immediately after the reading of the Declaration of ngress, setting forth the reasons for taking up arms against England, and e shouts of the soldiers were so loud as to frighten the enemy on Bunker ll, who rushed to arms, believing an immediate attack was to be made.

This manifesto declares that "Our cause is just. Our Union is perfect. ir internal resources are great, and, if necessary, foreign assistance is doubtedly attainable. We gratefully acknowledge as signal instances of vine favor toward us, that His providence would not permit us to be lled into this severe controversy, until we were grown up to our present rength, had been previously exercised in warlike operations, and possessed the means of defending ourselves. With hearts fortified with these ani- ating reflections, we most solemnly, before God and the world, declare, at exerting the utmost energy of those powers which our beneficent Cre- or hath graciously bestowed upon us, the arms we have been compelled by ir enemies to assume, we will, in defiance of every hazard, with unabating mness and perseverance, employ for the preservation of our liberties, be- g with one mind resolved to die free men rather than to live slaves."

July 20th. — Fast Day. Services in church and camp. Soldiers are ordered attend public worship, but to take with them their arms and ammunition, be ready for battle at a moment's notice. I saw to-day part of a British fficer's letter to a friend in England, which failed of its destination. He peaks eloquently of our beautiful Colony, which now is besprinkled with rts and camps, and all the paraphernalia of war: "The country is most eautifully tumbled about in hills and valleys, rocks and woods, interspersed ith straggling villages, with here and there a spire peeping over the trees, nd the country of the most charming green that delighted eye ever gazed n." Would that he and his countrymen were loath to disturb the quiet eauty of this land by the terrible sights and sounds of war. Our need of mmunition is so great that we are called upon to give up our window eights, to be moulded into bullets; and even the tombs in the old ceme- ry are robbed of their leaden coats-of-arms, and Christ Church of its etal organ-pipes for the same purpose. The very mention of powder sets very one in a shiver. General Washington sat for a full half hour without peaking, when, in the general council, upon his first arrival, he was told of ne great want of that death-dealing substance. But, in spite of its being o ill-prepared for contest, General Washington acknowledges that there is ood material in the army, made up as it is "of a great number of men, ole-bodied, active, zealous in the cause, and of unquestionable courage." eneral Washington himself has thrown up the first sod preparatory to uilding a fort near the river; and the swamps and marshes are dotted with borers whose whole heart is in their work. The Soden Farm and the ine banks and oyster banks are not to be without redoubts. This matter f entrenchments absorbs the time and thoughts of every one.

July 25th. — A company of riflemen, commanded by Captain Thompson has joined our army, — a most singular body of men, dressed in Indian costume, with brown linen hunting-jackets confined by wampum belt, leggings and moccasins elaborately trimmed with beads, and a simple round hat. Each carries a tomahawk or knife stuck in his belt, and his own unerring rifle which he brought from his home in the backwoods. They have all come a distance of four hundred, and some as many as seven hundred miles. They are strong, muscular men, looking equal to any hardships and, from what we hear of their characteristics, we may be sure they will create havoc among the Redcoats. Since their early boyhood they have been trained marksmen, having been punished every time they failed to hit their game in the head.

August 1st. — There is a young man in camp whom I have noticed again and again as he passes the house. He is striking in appearance, though quite small and boyish. His eyes are piercing in their brightness, and there is something winning in his manner. His name is Aaron Burr, a son of Rev. Aaron Burr, formerly President of Princeton College, N. J., and grandson of Rev. Jonathan Edwards. Things are very quiet now in both armies. The enemy is closely hemmed in on all sides by the redoubts thrown up by our troops. With so little ammunition it is impossible to make an attack or even to answer the volleys from their guns. The other day a shell from Copp's Hill struck very near the president's house, though no harm was done through the heroism of a soldier who risked his life in stamping upon the still burning fuse. General Washington has desired Colonel John Vassall's house to be made ready for him, and will remove there as soon as possible. Congress has adjourned for five weeks.

[LETTER FROM DOROTHY DUDLEY TO MISS ESTHER LIVINGSTONE OF PHILADELPHIA.[1]]

CAMBRIDGE, Aug. 30, 1775.

MY DEAREST ESTHER, — I have an opportunity to send you a letter by a messenger who goes to Philadelphia to-morrow, and hasten to improve it since I have written so little during the terrible months that have passed. Let me give you a hasty sketch of our Cambridge life since the day when American blood was shed by British troops on Lexington Common. Of course it is all familiar to you through the public prints, — the hanging of the lantern from the belfry tower; the midnight cry which roused every one from sleep; the hurried preparations for the fight; the defeat of the haughty Redcoats with a loss of nearly three hundred from their ranks which cost our militia nearly one hundred brave men. But you can form no idea of the horrors which fastened themselves upon the poor distressed people of our town. Women, whose husbands had rushed to the affray eside themselves with fright, started off in search of a place of safety, rrying with them their children and such household goods as they gath- ed together in their haste. Mrs. Dr. Winthrop in the confusion made r way with a number of others toward Fresh Pond, and passed through e battle-ground at Menotomy, where lay the dead bodies of both British id American soldiers. The fugitives were sent to Andover, as it was un- fe for them to return to Cambridge.

[1] The Editor inserts this lively letter at this point because it very pleasantly complements the narrative of the Diary.

The affair that day was the signal for war; and it needed not the appeal r volunteers to bring together hundreds and thousands of brave men on e with enthusiasm and eager for battle. Our town was deluged with sol- ers for the time; and General Heath, the superior officer, was at his wits' id to keep order in the midst of so much coming and going. Many of the en stayed but a few days, and returned to their homes to make prepara- ons for joining the army permanently. General Artemas Ward, the vet- an soldier, was put at the head of affairs almost immediately, and the work levying an army went on rapidly.

You know about Bunker Hill, and the loss of our brave Dr. Warren, who deeply mourned by all. The memory of that day will live in American earts, so long as one spark of patriotism burns in our beloved land. Pres- tt out-did himself, I have heard, in his efforts to spur the men on in de- nce of their works. He walked back and forth in the redoubt, talking heerily all the time, and firing the men with his own flaming enthusiasm. eneral Gage, watching our troops through his glass, inquired who this in- epid officer was. A brother-in-law of Colonel Prescott's told him.

"Will he fight?" he asked.

"Yes, sir; he is an old soldier, and will fight as long as a drop of blood mains in his veins."

"The works must be carried," was the British general's reply.

And they were carried, as you know, though with terrible loss to the Brit- h army. Colonel Prescott said after the battle, that he had not done ough to satisfy himself, but we think he has immortalized his name.

Come with me, and I will show you our army, with our matchless chief at s head. Cambridge is a military town, the Common is the parade ground, id Massachusetts, Stoughton, Hollis, and Harvard halls, and Holden hapel, so lately echoing the tread of students' feet, are occupied as arracks. The beautiful college green is disfigured by earthworks, thrown p in the spring, in anticipation of an attack from the enemy. Christ hurch [1] is occupied by soldiers, owing to scarcity of tents. Rev. Mr. Ser-

[1] "Our ancient church! its lowly tower,
Beneath the loftier spire,
Is shadowed when the sunset hour
Clothes the tall shaft in fire;
It sinks beyond the distant eye,
Long ere the glittering vane
High wheeling in the western sky.
Has faded o'er the plain."—O. W. Holmes.

THE OLD PARSONAGE, BUILT IN 1670.

jeant, its rector, has been obliged to leave town, driven away on account of his adherence to the King. Many houses on the Menotomy road,[1] have been given to the army as quarters, and you see military in all corners. Boston is encircled with our troops ; actually hemmed in, though we are weak by reason of the sad want of powder and other necessary supplies. You remember Colonel Vassall's [2] magnificent house on the road to Watertown. It is taken by our government, and is now General Washington's head-quarters. Major Henry Vassall's, on the opposite side of the road,[3] is a hospital for the wounded at Bunker Hill.

Judge Lee, being lukewarm in his Tory principles, and not interfering in politics, is allowed to retain his fine old mansion, the frame of which was brought from the old country, years before the present owner was born. Mr. Jonathan Sewall,[4] you know, has fled, and Captain George Ruggles.[5] The latter's house is filled with wounded soldiers just now, as is also Colonel Phipps's,[6] which you remember. Mr. Ralph Inman has left his estate, and Old Put makes the house his head-quarters, his troops occupying barracks on the grounds. On that terrible 19th of April, when the affray at Lexington had filled the very air with horror, many families, frightened from their homes by the sounds of approaching battle, congregated at Mr. Dana's house on Butler's Hill,[7] and there our good pastor, Dr. Appleton, met his little flock, to comfort and cheer their timid hearts, and lead their thoughts upward to Him whose arm is strong to help in time of need. While engaged in fervent prayer, the cry was heard, "The Redcoats are running," and with thankful haste the patriotic minister said "Amen," and the company dispersed.

You remember Dr. Appleton, with his kindly eyes and benevolent smile. I must tell you an anecdote characteristic of him, in the days when Harvard College harbored roguish students within its walls, in place of its present occupants. The Doctor had a number of hens. Some mischievous boys, thinking to have a feast at his expense, one night made a visit to [1] Now North Avenue. — Ed.

[2] Now the home of the poet, Longfellow, who says of it : —

"Once, ah, once, within these walls,
One whom memory oft recalls,
The Father of his Country dwelt;
And yonder meadows broad and damp,
The fires of the besieging camp,
Encircled with a burning belt.
Up and down these echoing stairs,
Heavy with the weight of cares,
Sounded his majestic tread :
Yes, within this very room
Sat he in those hours of gloom,
Weary both in heart and head." — Ed.

[3] The Batchelder house. — Ed.

[4] Mr. John Brewster's house. — Ed.

[5] Wells house. — Ed.

[6] On Arrow Street. — Ed.

[7] Now Dana Hill. — Ed.

his hen-roost. The good Doctor had an inkling of their errand, and stationed himself in the friendly shadow of a tree, to watch and listen. There were two of them — one remained below as sentinel, the other climbed the roost to procure the game. One by one he wrung the necks of the astonished and unresisting fowls, and tossed them to the ground. At last he came to the old rooster, and called down in a whisper: "Say, Jack, here 's the old rooster. Shall we take him?" Jack, meanwhile, had been alarmed by a rustling noise behind him, and, turning, discovered his pastor. Without a word he precipitately departed, leaving his friend alone. He, too, had heard the sound, though ignorant of its cause. Again he cautiously spoke: "Quick, Jack, say shall we take him?" A voice in the same tone replied, "Yes, we 'll have him. He 'll make a nice stew. Hand him down." Down he came, and with him the thief, who, in consternation, recognized, not the partner of his guilt, but the good man whom they were robbing. Not a word was spoken; silently each went his way. In a day or two the whole class, of which these were members, received a cordial invitation to dine with the Rev. Doctor. Every one complied, and they sat down to a dinner fit for a prince. There were roast fowls, and fricasseed fowls, and broiled fowls, with all sorts of tempting dishes, to sharpen the appetite. The Doctor was in his pleasantest mood, and chatted sociably with his guests during the whole of the repast. When they had eaten to their satisfaction, he ordered another dish to be brought on, saying, "You must every one have some of this nice stew, made from the old rooster. It is very good." No one dared refuse, and in no other way was allusion made to the occasion which furnished this admirable dinner. The Doctor, you may be sure, was not troubled afterwards by thieves.

So you have seen Mrs. Hancock. Is she not charming! One cannot wonder at Madame Lydia Hancock's fondness for her, and resolve to secure the treasure for her nephew. You have heard how carefully she guarded her against the approach of any invader upon Mr. John Hancock's rights.

I visited Lexington, the other day, and trod the ground so lately wet with the blood of our noble minute-men; went into Mr. Clarke's house where "King" Hancock, and "Citizen" Adams, were lodged that memorable night before the battle, and walked under the tree, which I am told sheltered them during part of that time of terror. I saw the bullet in the wall of the attic chamber where the family were hid at the time, and where Madame Hancock very narrowly escaped death, a ball grazing her cheek as it passed. After the battle Mr. Hancock, who had his coach and four at hand, left the town, accompanied by his Aunt Lydia and Miss Dorothy Quincy,[1] and rode to one of the neighboring villages, and from there by slow stage to Fairfield, Connecticut. Madame Hancock is well acquainted with Mr. Timothy Edwards, a son of Rev. Jonathan Edwards, and at his house they stopped, and John Hancock and Dorothy Quincy were made an and wife. Mr. Edwards has a nephew living with him, whom he has opted, and treats in all respects as his own son. Aaron Burr is his name. e is a young man of fascinating manners, and many accomplishments. e was much charmed with Miss Quincy, I have heard, and she in turn was t insensible to his attractions, but Madame Hancock kept a jealous eye on them both, and would not allow any advances upon the part of the ung man, toward the prize reserved for her nephew. When the knot was d that made them one, she felt at liberty to breathe. Immediately after e wedding, they set out for Philadelphia, which has been their home ever ıce.

[1] This was a niece of the "Dorothy Q," immortalized in Dr. Holmes's happy poem. — Ed.

Samuel Adams.[1]

[1] This portrait is from the one by Copley, now in Faneuil Hall. — Ed.

I wish you were with me this delightful summer weather. I sometimes cannot believe that this busy military camp, with its noise and confusion its drum-beating and parades, its variegated appearance, so in contras to the quiet look it was wont to wear, can be the same town of Cam bridge I remember a year ago. In my walks I frequently meet sad re minders of the reality of the war; sometimes the slow, limping gait, an the dull thud of a crutch, will call my attention; again a tell-tale sling, wil speak of the strength gone from an arm once full of energy in the country' service, or an empty sleeve, or weary haggard, face, will touch the deepes depths of gratitude and pity.

Old Mrs. Trowbridge, who is, you know, the soul of goodness, is inde fatigable in doing for the comfort of the soldiers in the hospitals. I hav been with her several times, to carry dainties for their flagging appetites and to do many little things to ease the pain and weariness that creep int every hour. It is a pleasure to be able to break the monotony of the lon days, and sometimes I have taken a book — perhaps Bunyan's good ol Allegory, which is ever fresh and full of life — or better, the Bible, the on book which never grows old, and which yields from its inexhaustible well treasure, something suited to the individual need of every one who seek to draw therefrom. The brightening look chasing away the cloud whic shadowed many a face, has been more than enough to reward me for m little effort. Very glad I am, if I can make the brave men forget then selves in their eager stories of battle and camp-life, before the cruel bull brought death to their door. Bunker Hill, I have had rehearsed to me, i all the different aspects it wore to those who were sharers in its glory ar its loss. And the French War, too, has furnished theme for many tales adventure and daring courage, from the lips of veterans in the service.

The Widow Vassall's house, which serves as a hospital, I have bee oftener to than to others, because of its nearness to my home. This hou has a history of its own dating back I don't dare to say how many years, b somewhere in the last century, and was once the residence of good old Go ernor Belcher. I have heard that Governor Belcher's wife was once on tri for her life in England for the murder of her first husband, Mr. Teal. seems he had long contemplated suicide, and at last accomplished the dee shooting himself through the brains with a pistol. Mrs. Teal, seizing t weapon from his hand, was found by a servant of the family standing, it w averred, in a most suspicious attitude. Upon the testimony of this witne she was tried for murder, but acquitted, having been proved entirely inn cent of the crime.

Major Henry Vassall, a brother of Colonel John Vassall, died about s years ago and left the house in the hands of his widow. It is a very fi old mansion, showing signs of wealth in its owners, and there are some culiarities in its style of building. Major Appleton called my attention o day to a large panel in the wall near the fire-place, opening which he stepp to the cavity and shut the door. I found it hard to believe my eyes as I w him disappear in the wall, but afterwards made assurance doubly sure peeping into the closet myself and discovered ample space for hiding easures of any description, and for secreting a fugitive could he find air to ep him alive. The grounds of the Vassall house extend to those of the rattle estate, which Major Mifflin has just taken as his residence. These ounds are exquisitely laid out, and are really the finest in New England. any of the convalescent soldiers, able to stroll about in the soft summer r, have found welcome for them to the Brattle grounds in the nodding aves and grasses and the sweet odors of the flowers and the gentle call the fountain. The kind Major and his gentle lady, herself delicate in ealth, both extend warm sympathy and hospitality to our brave soldiers. o you see, my friend, that my life for a time runs in a different current om its wont. Our hands are soldiers' property now; jellies are to be made, nt to be scraped, bandages to be prepared for waiting wounds. Embroidery laid aside and spinning takes its place. Oh, there is such urgent need for conomy! No one, out of the secret, would believe how little ammunition in the possession of our army. If you will walk with me through the old urying ground I will show you holes in the tombs of our revered ancestors, ade by the removal of the leaden coats-of-arms. This, you may be sure, ould not be allowed unless necessity required. You know the graves here ate back fully a century and a quarter, and count among them those of the rst presidents of our college, as well as many who were held in honor in oth public and private life. President Charles Chauncy, the second who eld the office, died in 1672, and a long Latin inscription testifies to his virues and his labors. His wife died four years previous, and I have found er epitaph, which I will copy for you.

1483204

MRS

CATHARINE CHAUNCY

AGED. LXVI DYED JAN. XXIIII

ANO DOM MDCLXVII —

Upon ye death of ye pious Mother in God
Mrs Katherine Chauncy, deceased. 24. 11. 67.

Here lies enterr'd wth in this Shrine
A spirit meeke, a Soule divine,
Endew'd wth grace & piety,
Excelling in humility:
Preferring Gods commands above
All fine delights, & this Worlds love,
Whilest here she live'd, she tooke delight
In reading, praying day, & night;

In faith she was a Puritan
Daily from selfe to Christ she ran
For aid & help, whilest here she staid:
O This was ye sweet heavenly trade
Of this renowned matron! which
Was to all saints a Pattern rich,
Most richly fraught wth grace sublime,
With meekenesse, & wth love divine:
By hope she live'd, in faith she stood
Washt from her sins wth Xts own blood:
Active, & constant she was here,
In heaven above ye palme she weares;
Wth Xt she reignes, in heaven she sings
Hosannas to her Lord, & King.
* * * * * * * *
Death was ye key, wch let her out
* * * * * * * *
Pale gastly death hath sent his shaft
And hath by Chance nigh broke our heart
Deaths volleys sound, sad stormes appeare,
Mourning draws on: Poore Harverd feare,
Least this sad stroke should be a signe
Of suddeine future death to thine.

J. B. 24. 11. 67.

There is an element in our camp life not to be overlooked — I mean th negroes, many of them slaves, who, heart and soul, enter into the interes of our country and render valuable service both in tent and field. It was colored soldier, you know, who shot Major Pitcairn at Bunker Hill. Mar of them are scattered through the ranks of the army, and in the hospitals an the camp faithfully fill offices of various kinds. Is it not a curious custo that of naming the black boys and girls for heathen gods and goddesses? otten laugh at the dusky Junos and Venuses which hold sway in the kitch and the Jupiters and Neptunes and Mercuries who in the old days used guide the rein and flourish the whip in proud consciousness of family dignit and now that their Tory masters have gone, enlist their powers for the con fort and care of the soldiers.

I shall expect a reply to my letter by your first opportunity for sendin Be sure to write me as fully of your life as I have written of my own. Wit love in abundance, dearest Esther, I am your very affectionate friend,

Dorothy Dudley.[1]

September 10*th*. — General Washington is preparing an expedition to marc into Canada by way of the Kennebec river, through the wilderness of nort

[1] The Editor is never able to read letters of the heroic age of our country without a regret that t art of epistolary correspondence has been suffered to fall into desuetude. The element of a comfortab cordiality seems to be lost in our modern correspondence.

rn Massachusetts. It will include about eleven hundred men under the ommand of Colonel Benedict Arnold, who they say is "daringly and desperately brave, sanguinely hopeful, of restless activity, and intelligent and nterprising." His object is the conquest of Quebec. This enterprise akes a break in the monotonous life of the soldiers who are panting for ctive service, and many have gladly offered themselves for the undertaking, alling, as it does for great powers of endurance and unflinching courage. oung Aaron Burr, who has been languishing under the enforced idleness, nd really fretted himself into a fever, has jumped at this opening for adenture and joined himself to the band, in spite of the remonstrances of his iends, who think him ill fitted for the exposure. He has been appointed ajor.

General Richard Montgomery, who distinguished himself in the French ar, and is one of the brigadier-generals appointed by Congress, is in comand in Canada. He is a very valuable general, trusty, prompt, and brave, nd yet retiring, choosing the quiet and seclusion of home to the noise and istractions of the army. His wife is a daughter of Robert R. Livingston f New York, whose father, the aged Robert Livingston, died soon after the attle of Bunker Hill. This venerable man had always been a stanch patiot, and predicted the Revolution. Often he would say to his grandson, Robert, you will live to see this country independent." The last words of is octogenarian patriot, as he lay calmly awaiting the death angel, were: What news from Boston?"

Arnold's expedition will join Montgomery, and the united forces do their tmost to conquer the city of Quebec.

October 10th. — General Gage has sailed for England, and left his comand with General Sir William Howe, who is very popular with the army. he British are in great distress by reason of the scarcity of fresh meat nd vegetables. The country people cannot sell them any provisions, and eir naval supplies are nearly cut off by our armed vessels which defend he coast.

October 15th. — Dr. Franklin and others, a "Committee of Conference" om Congress, have come to consult with General Washington about the dvisability of enlisting a new army, as the terms of the present one expire 1 December. There he goes now, the venerable statesman, philosopher, nd sage, walking with our honored chief, whose tall, commanding figure owers above that of his companion. The countenances of both beam with enevolence and modesty and good sense, and show evidence of deep and nxious thought. Dr. Franklin's gray eyes are spectacled, and his whole ppearance speaks of wisdom in life's affairs.

Great excitement is occasioned by the discovery of a secret correspondnce which Dr. Benjamin Church has been carrying on with the enemy. Dr. Church has had the highest confidence of all, as a member of our vigiance committee, and was specially recommended to General Washington on his arrival in camp as a trustworthy and valuable man and one deputed t meet the Commander-in-chief and escort him from Springfield to Can bridge. To think of his being at heart a Tory all the time! I have a le ter of his which was intercepted and never reached its destination. N date, but written apparently soon after the battle of Bunker Hill.

"I hope this will reach you. Three attempts have I made without succes in effecting. The last the man was discover'd in attempting his escape, b fortunately my letter was sewed in the waist-band of his breeches. He w confined a few days, during which time you may guess my feelings; but little art and a little cash settled the matter. It is a month since my retu from Philadelphia. I went by way of Providence to visit mother. Th committee for warlike stores made me a formal tender of 12 pieces cannon, 18 and 24 pounders, they having took a previous resolution make the offer to Gen. Ward. To make a merit of my service I se them down, and when they received them they sent them to Stoughton be out of danger, even though they had formed the resolution as I befo hinted of fortifying Bunker's Hill, which with the cowardice of the clum Col. Gerrish & Col. Scammon was the lucky occasion of their defeat. Th affair happened before my return from Philadelphia. We lost 165 kille and since dead of their wounds. 120 now lie wounded — the chief w recover. They boast you have 1400 killed and wounded in that actio
You say the Rebels lost 1500 I suppose with equal truth. The people Connecticut are raving in the cause of liberty. A number from that co ony, from the town of Stamford, robbed the King's stores at New Yor with some small assistance the New Yorkers lent them. These were gro ing very turbulent. I counted 200 cannon from 24 to 3 pds. at King bridge, which the committee had secured for the use of the Colonies. Th Jersies are not a whit behind them in Connecticut in zeal. The Phil delphians exceed them both. I saw 1200 men in review there by Ge Lee, consisting of Quakers and other inhabitants in uniform, with 10 rifflemen and 40 horse, who together made a most warlike appearance.
mingled frequently & freely with the members of the Continental Co gress. They were united and determined in opposition and appear assured of success. Now to come home, the opposition has become fo midable. 1800 men, brave & determined, with Washington and Lee at the head, are no contemptible enemy. Adjutant General Gates is indefatigal in arranging the army. Provisions are very plenty, clothes are manufac turing in almost every town for the soldiers, 20 tons of powder lately arriv at Philadelphia, Connecticut, and Providence, upwards of 20 tons are n in camp. Salt petre is made in every colony, powder mills are erect and constantly employed in New York and Philadelphia. Volunteers the first fortunes are daily flocking to the camp, 1000 rifflemen in 2 or days. Recruits are now levying to augment the army to 22000 men. 10,0 nilitia are appointed in this Government to appear on the first summons. The bills of all the colonies circulate freely and are readily exchanged for ash. Add to this that unless some plan of accommodation takes place nmediately, their harbours will swarm with privateers. An army will e raised in the middle colonies to take possession of Canada. For the ake of the miserable convulsed empire solicit peace — repeal the acts or ritain is undone. This advice is the result of a warm affection to my ing and to the realm. Remember I never deceived you. — Every article ere sent you is sacredly true. — The papers will announce to you that I am gain a member for Boston. You will there see our motly council. A general arrangement of officers will take place, except the chief which will be uspended but for a little while to see what part Great Britain takes in consequence of the late Continental petition. A view to Independence grows nore and more general. Should Britain declare war against the Colonies ney are lost forever. Should Spain declare war against England, the colonies will declare a neutrality which will doubtless produce an offensive and efensive league between them ; for God's sake prevent it by a speedy accommodation.

"Writing this employed a day. I have been to Salem to reconnoitre, but ould not escape the geese in the Capitol. Tomorrow I set out for Newort on purpose to send you this. I write you fully, it being scarcely posble to prevent discovery. I am out of place here by choice, therefore out f pay & am determined to be so unless something is offered in my way. wish you would contrive to write me largely in cyphers — by way of Newort, addressed to Tom Richards, merchant, enclosed in a cover to me, intiating that I am a perfect stranger to you, but being recommended to you s a gentleman of Honor you took the liberty to enclose that letter, entreatg me to deliver it, as directed, the person, as you are informed, living at ambridge ! Sign some fictitious name. — This you may send to some conidential friend at Newport to be delivered to me at Watertown. Make use f every precaution or I perish. B. Church."

October 17th. — The committee have taken this matter of Dr. Church's eachery in hand but are undecided about the best course to pursue. The aitor is under arrest and his papers seized. At present he is imprisoned Widow Vassall's house, which has been his residence since his appointent as director-general of the hospital.[1] I caught a glimpse of his face the second story window to-day as I passed. I wonder how he can look it upon the exquisite beauty of the landscape, bustling with military life, l quivering with intense patriotism as it is, and not feel a conscience inge at his own despicable conduct.

October 24th. — Dr. Jeremy Belknap of Boston is in town, and preached r us last Sunday. His sermon was earnest and full of patriotism, and his prayers as well. He prayed for the King, I noticed, though it is becoming common to omit that petition, for the thought of separation from England grows more popular every day. The delegates from Congress have many matters to discuss with the Commander-in-chief — one is the expediency of making an attack upon Boston. Several of the committee wish to see Boston burned to the ground, but General Lee says it will be impossible to burn it unless men laden with bundles of straw enter the town and proceed to set fires in all corners. He thinks that a bombardment would not have the desired effect. It is decided to form a new army with longer enlistments than those of the present one, and the work will begin immediately. The Committee of Conference held its session at the head-quarters of General Washington, and General Greene, who was present the first evening of their arrival, says, in allusion to that great man, Dr. Franklin, whom he viewed with silent admiration during the whole evening: "Attention watched his lips and conviction closed his periods."

[1] This confirms the statement in the account of the Batchelder House on p. 101. — Ed.

November 7th. — Dr. Church has had his trial at last. Who could but pity him while they condemned, as with military escort and the music of fife and drum, he was taken from his improvised prison and carried to the Watertown meeting-house, there to be expelled from his seat in Congress and publicly branded as a traitor? The General Court resolved that he be sent to Norwich, Connecticut, and confined in jail, "without the use of pen, ink or paper, and that no person be allowed to converse with him, except in the the presence and hearing of a magistrate of the town or the sheriff of the county where he is confined, and in the English language." What with the disgrace and the discomforts of his prison life, I wonder if he does not believe in his inmost heart that the way of transgressors is hard!

November 12th. — Recruiting orders are given out and it is hoped that a new army will be raised rapidly. Another element is added to the noise of camp life — the sound of carpenters' tools, the hammering and sawing and planing preparatory to building winter barracks for the accommodation of the soldiers. There was a skirmish a few days ago at Lechmere's Point, which is an island when the water is at high tide. The cattle which graze upon the salt marshes there were a prize the Redcoats coveted, half-starved as they are, and one worth the risk of a fight to procure. So about four hundred men in a number of boats left Boston and landed at the Point, killed one sentinel and took the other prisoner, and succeeded in carrying off ten cows. The alarm was given and cannon from Prospect Hill were fired upon them, sinking one of their boats and killing two men. A regiment of riflemen under Colonel Thompson marched immediately, and to reach the Point were obliged to ford the river, which was up to their necks, and fired upon the marauders, who made their escape as fast as possible. Two of our men were dangerously wounded. Colonel Thompson behaved with much heroism, and was publicly thanked by the Commander-in-chief for the part played by himself and his brave men. Major Mifflin was there, and I have heard "flew about as if he would raise the whole army." General Washington looks upon this affair as the beginning of a general attack upon our works.

November 15th. — The new army is to be in uniform, and the following order has gone forth: "October 28th. It is recommended to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers, whose pay will be drawn in consequence of last Thursday's orders (especially to those whose attachment to the glorious cause in which they are engaged, and which will induce them to continue in the service another year), to lay out their money in shirts, shoes, stockings, and a good pair of leather breeches, and not in coats and waistcoats, as it is intended that the new army shall be clothed in uniform. To effect which, the Congress will lay in goods upon the best terms they can be bought anywhere for ready money, and will sell them to the soldiers without any profit; by which means, a uniform coat and waistcoat will come cheaper to them than any other clothing of the like kind can be bought. A number of tailors will be immediately set to work to make regimentals for those brave men who are willing at all hazards to defend their invaluable rights and privileges."

Cannon used before Boston.

November 28th. — Works have gone up on Cobble Hill,[1] under the direction of General Putnam, and General Heath without any annoyance from the Redcoats. I see by the papers that this redoubt is called "the most perfect piece of fortification that the American army has constructed during the present campaign, and on the day of its completion was named Putnam's impregnable fortress." Washington thinks that this inactivity on the part of General Howe is not without a meaning, that he is planning some grand attack upon our lines, and accordingly batteries are going up in various places to command the important points.

November 30th. — Our vessels at sea have been carrying on war with British ships, and one of ours, the Washington, has been captured by the Fowey, man-of-war. But success has attended our navy more than once, and to-day has come news of a grand capture — that of the British ordnance

[1] Now the site of the McLean Asylum, Somerville. — Ed.

brig Nancy, by Captain Manly, commander of the Lee. She is indeed a prize, containing a complete assortment of military stores — 2,000 muskets, 100,000 flints, 30,000 round shot, for one, six, and twelve-pounders; over thirty tons of musket shot, eleven mortar beds, and a thirteen-inch brass mortar weighing 2,700 pounds. So great a loss as this the Commander-in-chief thinks will not be lightly allowed to come to the British arms, and fearing an effort will be made to recover the ship, has immediately ordered four companies to Cape Ann to protect the stores, while all possible haste is used to remove them to a place of safety. One of the officers says that when news of the capture came to the soldiers, "such universal joy ran through the whole camp as if each grasped victory in his hand; to crown the glorious scene, there intervened one truly ludicrous, which was Old Put, mounted on a large mortar which was fixed in its bed for the occasion, standing parson to christen, while god-father Mifflin gave it the name of Congress. The huzzas on the occasion, I dare say, were heard through all the territories of our most gracious sovereign in this Province."

December 1st. — Winter is fairly upon us. Snow several inches deep. Mrs. John Adams is in town. I met her at Mrs. Mifflin's last evening. Mrs. Adams is a charming woman, combining ease and grace of manner, and sweetness of temper, with great strength and decision of character. I have the warmest admiration for her. Had a delightful evening. Major Mifflin is very agreeable, and his lady accomplished and winning. The host bustled about on hospitable thoughts intent, making every one at his ease. It seems he was once a Quaker, but was expelled from that peaceable sect when he asserted his determination to arm himself in his country's service. He is an admirable soldier, they say, though so small in stature, and has wonderful influence over his subordinates. General Lee was there. He made a good deal of sport for the ladies by telling stories of Hobgoblin Hall, as he delights to call his quarters at Mr. Isaac Royall's house in Medford, which is truly a magnificent mansion.[1] Colonel Royall has run away, having been terribly frightened at the prospect of war, and having no decided principles, either rebel or loyal; and is in danger of the one thing he dreaded most of all — confiscation. The house, built by his father in most substantial style, is surrounded by fruit trees of many varieties, and a profusion of shrubbery, and is shut in from the road by a brick wall. General Lee's imagination called up shadowy shapes to answer to his tread through its halls and corridors; hence the name. The General is a most singular man, very unprepossessing in appearance, tall and thin, with large features, eyes that are never at rest, and a certain air of carelessness, as if he gave not a thought to his dress or manner of life. He has a great fondness for dogs, and is rarely seen without one or more. Last night, "Mr. Spada," a large, shaggy, bearish-looking animal, was with him, and was the source of some annoyance as well as amusement to the guests. He insisted upon the dog's presenting his paw to Mrs. Adams, who, as a stranger, was entitled to every mark of attention. "Love me, love my dog," this whimsical man might well say to his friends. He has lived among the Indians long enough to acquire their confidence, and be honored by appointment as chief, and in their expressive way they called him from his passionate nature, "Boiling Water." He has travelled through Europe, and has lost two fingers in a personal encounter in Italy. His courage is undoubted, and his military abilities highly estimated by the Commander-in-chief and his fellow generals. He speaks and writes several languages, fluently, and Mrs. Adams says with truth, "the elegance of his pen far exceeds that of his person." Dr. Morgan, successor to the traitor Church as director-general of the hospital, lives with Major Mifflin in this fine old mansion, which surpasses all others in Cambridge in the beauty of its grounds. Brattle's Mall is a place of wonderful attraction, moonlight evenings in summer. The graceful play of the shadows upon the velvety lawns and well-kept paths, the murmuring hum of the river, the glad rush of the ice-cold water as it bursts from its prison in the marble grotto — all these are so many magnets, each drawing to the Brattle grounds a goodly number of pleasure-seekers. Now, the promenade is wrapt in a soft white dress, which clothes all nature — and dazzling in its purity, hides beneath its veil of charity all the blemishes of our mother earth.

[1] This house is still extant in Medford. — Ed.

December 9th. — There has been trouble in camp, and some crimes perpetrated of so flagrant a nature as to call for severe punishment. Several of the criminals have been sent to the famous Newgate prison, in Simsbury, Connecticut, once worked as copper mines and now given up for the confinement of the most atrocious villains. I have a copy of the letter Washington sent with the prisoners to the Committee of Safety at Simsbury: —

"CAMBRIDGE, Dec. 7th, 1775.

"GENTLEMEN: The prisoners which will be delivered you with this, having been tried by a court martial, and deemed to be such flagrant and atrocious villains, that they cannot by any means be set at large, or confined in any place near this camp, were sentenced to Simsbury, in Connecticut. You will therefore be pleased to have them secured in your jail, or in such other manner as to you shall seem necessary, so that they cannot possibly make their escape. The charges of their imprisonment will be at the Continental expense. I am, &c.

"GEORGE WASHINGTON."

I saw the prisoners, as under a strong guard they left the court-house after their condemnation to that horrible place. The reports of that underground dungeon are enough to make one shudder. Chained to the damp ground, far below the upper world, out of reach of the sun's rays or a breath of pure air, how can it be possible for life to go on? Surely only the most hardened wretches are entitled to such a fate!

December 11th. — Mrs. Washington, our general's lady, has arrived, and with her many ladies of the families of our officers. She has had a long, tedious journey from Mount Vernon, with bad roads and trying weather, and has come by short stages, stopping often to rest and change horses. She has gone directly to her husband's head-quarters. Mr. Custis, her son, accompanied her, with his wife.

December 12th. — Our army is in great distress for want of firewood and hay, and a call from the Assembly has gone forth to all the towns within twenty miles of Boston, to supply these articles, each according to its ability. The work on the barracks is completed, and the soldiers are occupying them. As far as possible, they are made comfortable and easy. Christ Church is vacated. Our army daily looks for an attack from the Redcoats, and Washington says he is "unable, upon any principle whatever, to account for their silence, unless it be to lull us into a fatal security." But instead, it has only increased our vigilance, and every possible avenue by which they might approach our lines is guarded. Captain Manly, the brave commander of the Lee, has drawn to himself well-earned praise by his skilful manœuvres in the seas. Several vessels with British cargoes have surrendered to his arms. An officer writes that one contained a vast number of letters, and "what is really extraordinary, not one that does not breathe enmity, death, and destruction to this fair land."

December 15th. — I have to-day taken a sad stroll with dear old Mr. Wadsworth[1] about the college grounds. I say it was "sad," because so it seemed, to see the buildings dedicated to education used as barracks, and the once white snow on the ground about them covered with the unsightly rubbish that always abounds where many soldiers remain long. My dear old friend mourned too as we walked from one building to another, and talked constantly about old times at Harvard, and of the traditions he received years ago from Mrs. Wadsworth's father, Mr. Walter Mildmay. Though the college is so old — it is a hundred and thirty-nine years old — the memory of these two men goes back to its beginning. Walter Mildmay knew and often talked with the Rev. Benjamin Woodbridge, whom Cotton Mather called "a star of the first magnitude," and the leader of the whole company of the graduates of the college. He was graduated in the class of 1642, with that George Downing who went to England, became a confidential member of the staff of Oliver Cromwell, and as his minister to Holland rendered such valuable aid to the cause of the Commonwealth. Downing was described by the poet Milton as "a person of eminent Quality." This walk has so much excited my aged friend that he can scarcely talk of anything but the colleges and their history. It is all my gain, for I have learned many things that I never knew before. Some of these I shall now write down, lest I forget them. It seems that on the 28th of October, 1636, "the General Court of Massachusetts Bay in New England" voted to appropriate £400 to establish a "schoole or colledge," which was the beginning of Harvard.[1] It did not have a local habitation, however, until after November of the following year, at which time Mr. Dudley (I believe he was one of my ancestors), Mr. Winthrop, Mr. Cotton, Mr. Shepard, and others, took "order for a colledge at Newetowne," as the old records say. In May, 1638,[2] the name of the town was changed to Cambridge, and in the following March the present name was given to the college, in honor of the Rev. John Harvard, a godly gentleman and lover of learning, who had been stirred up to give one half of his estate and all of his library to it. At first it was little more than a boarding-school, and was conducted by one Nathaniel Eaton, a person of most disreputable memory. In September, 1639, Eaton was discharged, and fined by the General Court for "cruell & barbaros beating of Mr. Natha: Briscoe, & for other neglecting & misvseing of his schollers." Eaton fled to "Pascataquack," and afterwards to Virginia, with a thousand pounds of his creditors' money. Mr. Wadsworth could not conceal his righteous indignation as he spoke of this man. Indeed, Eaton must have been very brutal, for he beat his poor pupils with little mercy, and had a rule that he would not give over correcting until he had subdued the party to his will. Governor Winthrop tells us that on one of these occasions the master used "a cudgel which was a walnut-tree plant big enough to have killed a horse, and a yard in length." But this was not all; for, though the pupils paid him well for their "diet," it was ordinarily nothing but porridge and pudding, and that very homely. They complained also that Mrs. Eaton denied them butter and cheese and beer "betwixt meals," that she forced them to make their own beds at times, and that she offended "Sam Hough," who was, I presume, one of the "schollers," by letting a certain Moor lie in his "sheet and pillow bier."[3] I am sure the "schollers" had hard times when Mr. and Mrs. Eaton taught and dieted them!

[1] This "Mr. Wadsworth" cannot be identified. He was evidently not a graduate of Harvard, for none of the three bearing the name were living in 1775. — Ed.

Towards the latter end of summer in the next year the learned, reverend, and judicious Mr. Henry Dunster came over, and was pointed out by the Lord, "with his unerring finger," as the one to take the direction of the young institution, now pretty firmly established with funds, as well as in the faith of the people. More money was soon sent from across the sea, for the enterprise was considered past the reach of a poor pilgrim people. Over the college there were twelve overseers, six being magistrates and six ministers; and the students had the advantage of being "under the orthodox and

[1] The Editor fails to find evidence that this money was ever actually paid.

[2] It was May 2d. — Ed.

[3] The curious reader will learn much more on this subject if he consult the doings of the General Court, quoted by Mr. Sibley in his Biographical Sketches of Graduates of Harvard University, vol. i. pp. 2–6. — Ed.

soul-flourishing ministry of Mr. Thomas Shepard."[1] a fact that is said t have had great influence in deciding the place at which the college wa established. In 1642, a class of nine bachelors, who had probably[2] bee under instruction for some time previous to the arrival of Mr. Dunster, wa graduated. People rejoiced greatly at the progress of these young men i learning and godliness. Some of the rules of the college provided that n one should be admitted that could not understand Tully, or such like class cal author ex tempore, and make and speak true Latin in verse and pros They were to understand that the main end of this life is "to know Go and Jesus Christ: and therefore to lay Christ in the bottom, as the onl foundation of all sound knowledge and learning." "And seeing the Lor only giveth wisdom, let every one seriously set himself by prayer in secr to seek it of Him.'" Further, they were to exercise themselves in readin the Scriptures twice a day. They could not "go abroad to other towns without permission; and were directed to eschew all profanity of God' Name, Attributes, Word, Ordinances, and Times of Worship. These rule were not ignored; and it is said that on the first Commencement Day "tw young men of good quality, lately come out of England," were complaine of "for foul misbehaviour, in swearing and ribaldry speeches," were co rected in the college, and sequestered for a time. For the most part, how ever, the young men came with a purpose, and worked with a will. The suffered privations, and their parents did also. Money was scarce in th Colony then, and the steward's bills were paid with beef, veal, pork, mutto poultry, grain, malt, eggs, butter, cheese, apples, cider, fuel, candles, cloth leather, shoes, and sometimes with tobacco, and even the products of th still. President Dunster labored against financial odds for fourteen years and was at last compelled to resign on account of certain views on baptis that were considered by some to have originated with the Evil One. M Wadsworth says he was never able to see exactly why a college presiden should have been compelled to resign for such reasons. The Rev. Charle Chauncy was next president; and during his term of office the financia difficulties increased so greatly that the General Court was appealed to fo aid for what was called then "the sinking college." Public grants and pr vate munificence, however, did not fail, and the work went on. Mr. Leonar Hoar, of the class of 1650, became president in 1672, and the same year th library was largely increased by a bequest of Theophilus Gale. Presiden Hoar was a sagacious man, and very creditable every way to his Alm Mater.[3] In 1685, the Rev. Increase Mather of Boston, of the class of 165 became president, and held the office sixteen years. Old Mr. Wadsworth

[1] From this learned divine the name of the Shepard Memorial Church is derived. — Ed.

[2] "And who was on the Catalogue
When college was begun?
Two nephews of the president,
And the professor's son." — Dr. Holmes

[3] See, on this point, The Harvard Book, vol. i. pp. 33, 34. — Ed.

ells me of a curious visit made to the college in July, 1680, by two Dutch-nen from Friesland. They were Jasper Dankers and Peter Sluyter, who vere making a tour in several American colonies, and made the following ecords in their diary : [1] — "9th, Tuesday. — We started out to go to Cambridge, lying to the N. E. of Boston, in order to see their college and printing-office. We left abt. ix o'k in the morning, and were set across the river at Charlestown. . . . We reached Cambridge abt. 8 o'k. It is not a large village, and the houses tand very much apart. The college building is the most conspicuous among them. We went to it expecting to see something curious, as it is the only college or would-be academy of the Protestants in all America; but ve found ourselves mistaken. In approaching the house, we neither heard nor saw anything mentionable; but going to the other side of the building ve heard noise enough in an upper room to lead my comrade to suppose they were engaged in disputation. We entered and went upstairs, where a per-son met us and requested us to walk in, which we did. We found there eight or ten young fellows sitting around smoking tobacco, with the smoke of which the room was so full that you could hardly see; and the whole house smelt so strong of it, that when I was going upstairs I said, 'This s certainly a tavern.' [2] We excused ourselves that we could speak Eng-ish only a little, but understood Dutch or French, which they did not. However, we spake as well as we could. We inquired how many professors here were, and they replied not one, that there was no money to support one. We asked how many students there were. They said at first thirty, and then came down to twenty. I afterwards understood there are prob-ably not ten. They could hardly speak a word of Latin, so that my comrade could not converse with them. They took us to the library, where there was nothing particular. We looked over it a little. They presented us with a glass of wine. This is all we ascertained there. The minister of the place goes there morning and evening to make prayer, and has charge over them. The students have tutors or masters. Our visit was soon over."

This account shows that the rules about the use of tobacco and the study of Latin were not always observed, and also that the students in those days were not above having a little fun at the expense of innocent strangers. Increase Mather was an absentee from Cambridge, with the exception of three months and a week, and appears to have considered his collegiate duties of much less importance than those he was called to render the state, and the people of the North Street Church, Boston. Meanwhile, the stu-

[2] This record is to be found also in the Memoirs of the Long Island Historical Society, vol. i. — Ed.

[2] "Dear haunts of lost or scattered friends,
Old Harvard's scholar-factories red,
Where song and smoke and laughter sped
The nights to proctor-haunted ends." — Lowell.

dents were well instructed by tutors Brattle and Leverett of the class o 1680. It was during the presidency of Mather, in 1700, that the book o Robert Calef, on the "Wonders of the Invisible World," was burned in th college yard. The next year Samuel Willard was appointed acting presi dent. He was followed by John Leverett, Benjamin Wadsworth, Edwar Holyoke, Samuel Locke, and, a year ago last October, by the Reveren Samuel Langdon, our present earnest, learned, and patriotic presiden May he long hold the office! Massachusetts Hall was built in 1720, whe Mr. Leverett was president. In 1725, the college faculty was organized. I seems that discipline had grown loose, for, two years before, there wer reports that the students were some of them guilty of "stealing, lying swearing, idleness, picking of locks, and too frequent use of strong drink. These practices were found difficult to be entirely abolished.

In January, 1764, — it seems as if the terrible event were but yesterday, – the college met with its great loss in the burning of Harvard Hall, in whic the General Court was sitting. The members were very active in the efforts to save the building; but it went, and with it the library of some si thousand volumes, the gift of Mr. John Harvard, Dr. Lightfoot, Bisho Berkeley, and others; the portraits and curiosities, the apparatus given b Mr. Hollis, and many other articles that can never be restored. This di aster was the occasion of a great display of good feeling, and many gifts o books, apparatus, and furniture were promptly made to the college by friend in America and England. Soon, however, the relations between the Colon and the mother country changed; and, as a token of their feelings, th senior class voted to take their degrees in homespun clothes. Their patr otism was loudly applauded; and they seem to have been led by this fac and by the atmosphere of rebellion about them, to disobey a rule of th Faculty that was of small importance. I forget what Mr. Wadsworth say it was.[1]

In 1769, the General Court met in the college chapel, and before proceed ing to business listened to an impassioned address from Mr. James Otis, o the class of 1743. In 1770, the General Court met again in Cambridge, – but I must stop. My interest in the whole subject of the relations of th college to our present terrible struggle has carried me on and on, until I am surprised at the number of pages I have devoted to it. I hope th record may prove of value to me at some future time, when the matter less fresh in my memory.

December 18th. — Mrs. Washington was at church yesterday with the Gen eral. She is a fine-looking lady, with regular features, dark chestnut ha and hazel eyes, and a certain gravity in her carriage which becomes h position. She was a widow when General Washington married her, ric and attractive, and he was taken captive at first sight. General an

[1] The rule had reference to excuses for absence from the college exercises. See The Harvar Book, vol. i. p. 42. — Ed.

s. Gates came with them, and occupied a neighboring pew. Dr. Appleton yed most earnestly for our country and its defenders, alluding pointedly l affectionately to the chief officer of the army. For some time it has been customary to pray for the King. Independence is much thought l talked of, and any sign of allegiance to the mother country is very offen-e. Mrs. Washington has expressed a wish that Christ Church may be in readiness for services, and orders have gone forth to that effect.

January 1, 1776. — Yesterday service was held in Christ Church. I was ited to be present. Colonel William Palfrey, at request of Mrs. Wash-ton, read the service and made a prayer of a form different from that com-nly used for the King. "O Lord, our Heavenly Father, high and mighty, ng of Kings and Lord of Lords, who hast made of one blood all the na-ns upon earth, and whose common bounty is liberally bestowed upon thy vorthy creatures; most heartily we beseech Thee to look down with rcy upon his Majesty, George the Third. Open his eyes and enlighten understanding, that he may pursue the true interest of the people over om Thou in Thy Providence hast placed him. Remove far from him all ked, corrupt men, and evil counsellors, that his throne may be estab-ned in justice and righteousness; and so replenish him with the grace of Holy Spirit, that he may incline to Thy will and walk in Thy way. Have y, O most merciful Father, upon the distresses of the inhabitants of this estern world. To that end we humbly pray Thee to bless the Continental ngress. Preside over their councils, and may they be led to such meas-s as may tend to Thy glory, to the advancement of true religion, and to happiness and prosperity of Thy people. We also pray Thee to bless our vincial assemblies, magistrates, and all in subordinate places of power l trust. Be with Thy servant, the Commander-in-chief of the American ces. Afford him Thy presence in all his undertakings; strengthen him it he may vanquish and overcome all his enemies; and grant that we y in due time be restored to the enjoyment of those inestimable bless-s we have been deprived of by the devices of cruel and bloodthirsty men, the sake of Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

General and Mrs. Washington, Mrs. Gates, Mrs. Morgan, Mrs. Mifflin, s. Custis, and many others, including officers, were present. The General loyal to his church as to his country, though he has identified himself h our parish during his residence among us. There was something nd and yet incongruous in the service in this church, which has so lately ltered the rollicking soldiers. Doors shattered and windows broken out, an destroyed, and the elegance and beauty of the building greatly marred. has been imperfectly repaired at the request of one whom its former aris-ratic worshippers hold in supreme contempt as a rebel against his Maj-y's most righteous rule. How very different was the scene from that in days before the war. The General's majestic figure, bent reverently in ayer, as with devout earnestness he entered into the service; the smallness of the band of worshippers, and the strangeness of the circumstanc and the surroundings. There was nothing but the contrast to recall t wealth and fashion which were wont to congregate there. I remember t families as they used to sit in church. First, in front of the chancel we the Temples, who every Sabbath drove from Ten Hills Farm ;[1] Mr. Robe Temple and his accomplished wife and lovely daughters. Their estate, whi is a very fine one, is on the supposed site of Governor Winthrop's hou as early as 1631, and where, it is thought, the little bark, the Blessing of t Bay, the first vessel built in American waters, was launched for its first vc age across the ocean. Mr. Temple is a stanch loyalist, and at the begi ning of war took passage for England, leaving his family at the Farm unc General Ward's protection. The vessel, however, was detained, and obliged to take up his residence in our camp. Behind the Temples sat t Royalls, relatives of Mrs. Henry Vassall, the Inmans and the Borlands, w owned and occupied the Bishop's Palace, as the magnificent mansion, bu by Rev. Mr. Apthorp, opposite the president's house, is called. The hou is grand in proportions and architecture, and is fitted in every respect bear the name which clings to it. It was thought that Mr. Apthorp had eye to the bishopric when he came to take charge of Christ Church, a put up this house of stately elegance. But whatever his wishes may ha been, they were not realized, for he abruptly terminated his ministry in Ca bridge after a few years. Among his congregation were the Faneuils, Lechmeres, the Lees, the Olivers, the Ruggleses, the Phippses, and the V salls. Many of these families were connected by relationship. Mrs. L Mrs. Lechmere, and Mrs. Vassall the elder, are sisters of Colonel Da Phipps, and daughters of Lieutenant-Governor Spencer Phipps. T "pretty little, dapper man, Colonel Oliver," as Reverend Mr. Serjeant u to call in sport our sometime lieutenant-governor, married a sister of Colo John Vassall the younger, and Colonel Vassall married his. Mrs. Rugg and Mrs Borland are aunts of Colonel Vassall's. These families were intimate terms with one another, and scarcely a day passed that did bring them together for social pleasures. Judge Jonathan Sewall, who af wards occupied Judge Richard Lechmere's house, married a daughter Mr. Edmund Quincy, an elder sister of Mrs. John Hancock. I well rem ber the train of carriages that rolled up to the church door, bearing the w shippers to the Sabbath service. The inevitable red cloak of Judge Jos Lee, his badge of office in the King's service, hung in graceful f around his stately form ; the beauty and elegance of the ladies were c spicuous, as silks and brocades rustled at every motion, and India sha told of wealth and luxury. The ties of blood and friendship were stren ened by those of a common faith, and the treasury of the church was f by cheerful givers from their abundance. Now everything is changed — who took such deep interest in the welfare of the church, all the orig

[1] Ten Hills Farm is within the present limits of Somerville. — Ed.

)scribers for the building are gone, with exception of Judge Joseph Lee, o is unmolested on account of his moderate principles, and Mr. John geon, who is a patriot. The very first article of plate this church possessed s a handsome silver christening basin, the gift of Madame Grizzel Ap-)rp, Dr. East Apthorp's mother, the first year of its existence as a church l of his duties as rector. It is inscribed : —

ECCLESIÆ CHRISTI
CANTABRIGIÆ IN NOVA ANGLIA
ANATHEMA CONSECRAVIT
DNA APTHORP
MDCCLXI.

The communion service, a silver flagon and covered cup, was presented Governor Thomas Hutchinson through Dr. Caner, rector of King's apel, who had received a new service of communion plate from King eorge III. for the use of the chapel in Boston. This flagon and cup are scribed with the royal arms and these words : —

THE GIFT OF
K. WILLIAM AND Q. MARY
TO YE REV'D SAMLL MYLES, FOR YE USE OF THEIR MAJESTIES CHAPELL IN N. ENGLAND, MDCXCIV.

January 2d. — Yesterday a union flag was raised on Prospect Hill. It has irteen stripes of alternate red and white, emblematic of the thirteen ited colonies, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Hamp-ire, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, orth and South Carolina, and Georgia, and on a blue ground in the corner e the united red and white crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. As was flung to the breeze and tossed and spread itself in graceful glee, volley of thirteen guns thundered forth a glad greeting to our national nner. If one can trust the index of patriotism and determination and avery, unswerving in the face of dreadful discouragements, this our tional flag will ere long proudly wave over a free country. There it is)w, flaunting defiantly in the very eyes of his Majesty's troops, who are ewildered by the loud huzzas which fill the air. Yesterday was the birthday our new Continental army. The first hastily organized one has been sbanded ; within gunshot, too, of twenty or thirty British regiments. he supply of fire-arms is so small that the guns of the retiring soldiers were ken from them to do service a second time in the hands of those who)w step into their places. This of course occasions dissatisfaction, as any of the men brought their own muskets when they enlisted. But, I am re, they will submit to the situation pleasantly when they see the necessities of the government. General Howe shows no disposition to le Boston, nor does General Washington feel secure enough in the strength his army to attempt to drive him away just yet. One of our officers fr General Putnam's division, speaking of the January thaw, expresses universal want of the soldiers: "The bay is open; everything thaws h except Old Put. He is still as hard as ever, crying out for powder, powd — ye gods, give us powder!" Congress has resolved "That if Gene Washington and his council of war should be of opinion that a success attack may be made on the troops in Boston, he do it in any manner may think expedient, notwithstanding the town and property in it may destroyed." President Hancock, in communicating this resolve, wrot

"You will notice the resolution relative to an attack upon Boston. T passed after a most serious debate in a committee of the whole house, and t execution was referred to you. May God crown your attempt with succe
I most heartily wish it, though individually I may be the greatest sufferer

January 4th. — His Majesty's "most gracious" speech has been receiv
It breathes the tenderest comp sion for his deluded American su jects. Yet there is an under-curr of revenge and threatening of struction, if continued rebellion persisted in. It seems that the of the flag-raising on Prospect H the speech was sent to Gene Washington from Boston, and t
British, hearing the noise of t shouting soldiers, misinterpreted as a signal of submission to t King, and are daily looking for formal surrender of our lines. H very different is the case from th of their anticipations! The co nists are more united than ever their resistance. They have bu

Hessian Flag.

the speech, and in every way in their power sought to express their ind nation. General Greene says: "America must raise an empire of perr nent duration, supported upon the grand pillars of truth, freedom, a religion, based upon justice, and defended by her own patriotic sons. Fr the sincerity of my heart, ready at all times to bleed in my country's cau
I recommend a declaration of independence, and call upon the world, a the great God who governs it, to witness the necessity, propriety, and re tude thereof." Great Britain is to hire Hessians to crush our rebelli Colonies. All their efforts will but encounter the most spirited oppositi and we firmly believe will result in nothing but disaster to themselves.

January 16th. — How our Boston buildings are desecrated by the British oldiers! Faneuil Hall, which has rung with the eloquence of patriots, is sed as a theatre, where ridiculous plays are performed and our army and s commanders turned into sport. Sometimes the playbills are sent to our fficers in camp. A few evenings ago, while they were amusing themselves ith a performance called "The Blockade of Boston," in which General Vashington was represented as an uncouth countryman, dressed shabbily, ith large wig and long rusty sword, suddenly a sergeant appeared and cried ut, "The Yankees are attacking our works on Bunker Hill." Immediately eneral Howe gave the order, "Officers to your alarm posts!" and there as a hasty breaking up of the assembly. The alarm was caused by an at- mpt of our soldiers to burn the remaining houses in Charlestown, — those iat had escaped the general conflagration last June, and which are used for uel by the British. The flames aroused the enemy on Bunker Hill, and iere was some firing on both sides, though only one life was lost on the iemy's side. None of our men were hurt.

January 22d. — A most curious delegation of Indians is in town, of the aghnawaga tribe; come to visit our army and pay their respects to its ommander-in-chief. General Washington treats them with great attention, nd will exert himself to make their stay one of enjoyment, that they may o away feeling the greatness and strength of our government, and our iendship toward their nation.

January 24th. — Have been honored by an introduction to several sachems nd warriors of the Caghnawaga Indians. Major Mifflin made a large din- er company, to-day, in their honor and I was invited. The Redmen are ery courteous in Indian fashion, and the profound bows and scrapes they iade to those favored with presentation are truly remarkable. One of the achems is of English birth, a native of Massachusetts, carried away in in- ancy by the savages and brought up as one of their own children. Another as French blood in his veins. They go to-morrow, I believe, to Roxbury, o view the lines under General Thomas's command, and will be laden with resents of clothing and trinkets of various kinds when they return to their wn people. Mr. John Adams, our member of Congress, was at Major Mif- in's to-day. He came from Roxbury this morning, and to-morrow continues is journey to Philadelphia to join the Continental Congress. The Indians, hen told his relations to government, showed signs of curiosity and regarded im with great attention. Mr. Adams is a fine looking man, with a broad, apacious head, seemingly equal to a large amount of brainwork, pleasant hough serious expression, a figure a little below the medium in height, and nclining to be stout. He stands among the foremost men in Congress, and is ability to weigh the important matters of state is undoubted. He it is ho nominated General Washington for commander-in-chief, and the clear- ess of his judgment in making that motion is acknowledged by every one.

January 28th. — There is a pamphlet going the rounds which awakens universal interest, and the sentiments are much admired for their boldnes and patriotism. The writer is one Thomas Paine, an English Quaker wh has been in America a little over a year, but has made acquaintance wi Franklin, Samuel Adams, Rush, and other prominent public men. Th book was shown to them for criticism, and called by Rush by the title "Common Sense." It says: —

"The sun never shone on a cause of greater worth. 'T is not the affair a city, a county, a province, or a kingdom, but of a continent, of at least o eight part of the habitable globe. 'T is not the concern of a day, a year, an age; posterity are virtually involved in it even to the end of time. A Second Harvard, built 1766.

men, whether in England or America, confess that a separation between t countries will take place one time or other. To find out the very time, need not go far, for the time hath found us. The present, likewise, is th peculiar time which never happens to a nation but once, the time of formi itself into a government. Until we consent that the seat of government America be legally and authoritatively occupied, where will be our freedo Where our property? Nothing can settle our affairs so expeditiously an open and determined declaration of independence. The blood of t slain, the weeping voice of nature cries, 't is time to part. A government our own is our natural right. Freedom hath been hunted round the glob Europe regards her as a stranger ; and England hath given her warning to depart. Oh ! receive the fugitive and prepare an asylum for mankind."

January 29th. — The expedition which left Cambridge last autumn for Canada under command of Benedict Arnold, encountered terrible trials, and many, frightened at the hardships of the march, returned. Those who remained endured almost incredible sufferings ; cold, hunger, exhaustion, combined to render them wretched and incapable of service. Their clothes were torn by the forest bushes, their bodies scratched by numberless thorns, and their shoes worn by constant walking over the rough ground, so that many were forced to go barefoot, their food so scarce that many a meal was furnished by the faithful dogs of the party. Here and there a man was left behind to die on the road, as it was impossible to be burdened with helpless invalids. The middle of November the expedition — that part which survived the horrors of the march, reached Quebec, and the third day of last month was joined by General Montgomery, who left the conquered city of Montreal with a subordinate officer, and came to attempt the conquest of the strongest fortified city in America. For several weeks the besieging army surrounded the city, and on the last day of December an assault was made, headed by the brave general. He compelled none to follow him in the attack ; he wanted with him "no persons who went with reluctance." To his own soldiers he said : "Men of New York, you will not fear to follow where your general leads. Push on, brave boys ; Quebec is ours !" Pressing forward directly in front of the cannon, he was greeted with a volley of grapeshot which laid him dead, and with him his young aid-de-camp, McPherson, and eleven others. Consternation seized the expedition at the fall of its commander, and an immediate retreat was ordered. General Montgomery was an experienced soldier and a valued officer. His loss is mourned all over the country. At news of his death "the whole city of Philadelphia was in tears ; every person seemed to have lost his nearest relative or heart friend." Congress publicly expressed for him "their grateful remembrance, profound respect, and high veneration ; and desiring to transmit to future ages a truly worthy example of patriotism, conduct, boldness of enterprise, insuperable perseverance, and contempt of danger and death, resolve to rear a marble monument to the glory of Richard Montgomery." Not in public life alone was he beloved and honored ; in all the relations of home he was faithful, — kind, upright, modest, every one held him in high esteem. He and his aid-de-camp were buried with military honors by the governor and council of Quebec.

January 30th. — Madame Washington has enlivened the monotony of her winter among us by a reception, on the seventeenth anniversary of her wedding day. The fine old Vassall mansion was in gala dress, and the coming and going of guests brightened the sober aspect of the General's head-quarters. The General and his wife stood in the drawing-room at the left of the front entrance, and there received the company. General Washington's study is the room opposite, and opening out of this, the one set apart for hi military family. These of course were all thrown open for the accommoda tion of the guests. There was much chatting and walking to and fro, an easy and social manners were the rule. The General does not talk much but is gracious and courteous to all. His lady is very unceremonious an easy like other Virginia ladies, though there is no lack of dignity in he manner. Of course simplicity of dress was noticeable, — no jewels or costl ornaments, — though tasteful gowns, daintily trimmed by their owner's fir gers, were numerous. The occasion was a most enjoyable one.

February 3d. — How very exact General Washington is, in all the little d tails of his business! I have a letter, that he wrote to General Sulliva this week, giving directions about the pay of soldiers under his comman which illustrates this: —

"CAMBRIDGE, 28th Jan., 1776.

"DR SIR I quite forgot to enquire last night (when you were shewin me the Militia Pay Roll) at what rates the officers pay was charged — I a willing to allow them the same pay as the Troops have had and have — th is, to the first of Jany agreeable to the old establishment — (more I cannc — & For the month of Jany according to the present pay. This is pu ting of them in all respects up on a footing with the continental army. — Yo will consider therefore how far this alteration will square with your mode making up the Pay Rolls, as the manner of charging & extending th sums shd appear clear upon the face of the accts — I must again desi you to request the Captains to be very correct in making up their acc not only because they are to swear to them, but because I must f my own Justification have all the extensions & additions tryed. — Shou any of them therefore prove wrong, they will not only give themselves good deal of trouble & delay for nothing but me also, and I must aga desire that they may be cautioned against Including men that have Inlist into the Continental service, as I will take a good deal of pains to prever and if not prevented, to detect an evil, which I am apprehensive will practiced. If I recollect the Roll you showed me last night men of t same Company and as I suppose from the same Town are charged a diff ent number of days, whereas I think the Ingagement is, that they are to paid from the time of their marching from the Town — however as I w engaged in reading letters & news papers at the time, I might have m taken the matter. As I understand the muster Rolls of these Compan (from New Hampshire) are lodged with you I should be glad to recei them with your acct. of the money expended. — If the mileage is drawn in the manner propos'd by you, the Comy should be apprised of it, as told me some of the militia capts with out distinguishing of which Gover ment were applying to settle with him I am Dr Sir

"Yr most obedt servt.

"Ge WASHINGTON.

"P. S. If you are not Ingaged I should be glad of your company at dinner at 2 o'clock."

February 4th, Sunday. — Dr. Langdon preached this morning from Micah v. 5; "For all people will walk every one in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God forever and ever."

His sermon in the afternoon was from the text: "Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see: but they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy at the people; yea, the fire of thine enemies shall devour them." They were warm, earnest discourses, burning with patriotism and loyalty to God. It is a pleasure to listen to the words of our good President, whenever he visits the camp and occupies Dr. Appleton's pulpit.

February 11th. — To-day the pulpit was filled by Rev. Mr. Noble of Newburyport, who preached a good sermon from Revelation xix. 5: "And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God all ye his servants, and ye that fear Him, both small and great." The meeting-house was well filled, in spite of the intense cold which crept through the doors and windows, and did its best to turn us all into icicles. The wind whistled its loudest, and blew its heaviest, so that the good minister's voice was often lost in the tumult. Having no cellar under the building, cold feet are the order of the day these wintry Sabbaths, for all who are not provided with a foot-stove, to send its pleasant warmth through the whole body. I wonder when the time will come that the meeting-house will be allowed the comfort of a stove!

February 27th. — General Washington has issued orders, that "all officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers, are positively forbid playing at cards and other games of chance. At this time of public distress, men may find enough to do in the service of their God and their country, without abandoning themselves to vice and immorality. As the season is now fast approaching when every man must expect to be drawn into the field of action, it is highly important that he should prepare his mind as well as everything necessary for it. It is a noble cause we are engaged in; it is the cause of virtue and mankind; every temporal advantage and comfort to us and our posterity, depends upon the vigor of our exertions; in short, freedom or slavery must be the result of our conduct; there can therefore be no greater inducement to men to behave well. But it may not be amiss for the troops to know that if any man in action shall presume to skulk, hide himself, or retreat from the enemy without the orders of his commanding officer, he will be instantly shot down as an example of cowardice; cowards having too frequently disconcerted the best formed troops by their dastardly behavior." There has been a good deal of card playing and gambling of various kinds. The enforced quiet of the soldiers has been irksome, and they enlivened the monotony in any way they could devise. Many have had opportunity to work at their trades of shoemaking, tailoring, and the like, or to add to their income by selling such things as nuts, apple and cider, which make a little variety in the daily rations. They are we fed, having a good supply of substantial food — corned beef and pork fou days in a week, salt fish one day, and fresh beef two days. As milk is ou of the question in the winter, they are allowed one pound and a half of bee or eighteen ounces of pork every day. A half pint of rice, or a pint o Indian meal, is given them for a week, a quart of spruce beer daily, or nin gallons of molasses to one hundred men per week. Every man has on pound of flour every day except one, in a week, when hard bread takes it place. Butter is given out at the rate of six ounces a week, to each ma Pease, beans, or other vegetables, such as potatoes, turnips, onions, are dea out in weekly portions. These short winter days, candles are quite a neces sary article, and are given every week to the soldiers, six pounds for on hundred men. I have made this schedule of the soldiers' rations, becaus everything that concerns their comfort has a special interest for me. W seem to be quartered right in the midst of the army, and all the minutiæ o their daily life are an open book before us.

March 2d. — General Washington has been as anxious as any one of th soldiers to attack Boston and dislodge the British troops, but not till no has he felt that he could safely undertake it. Under many difficulties owing to the hard, frozen ground, works have been thrown up on Lech mere's Point and heavy ordnance placed there. Strong guards are mounte on the works, and everything ready for an attack. I saw some mortars ca ried over to the Point to-day. The camp begins to look as if battle wa resolved upon. Militia from the neighboring towns is pouring in, in re sponse to General Washington's order. Large quantities of fagots an screwed hay are collected for entrenching purposes, and what tells a plain story than all other preparations, two thousand bandages are in readines for the wounds which it is expected will need them. About a fortnight ag we had some very severe weather which made strong ice between Dorche ter and Boston Neck and also between Roxbury and the Common. Ge eral Washington wished to take that opportunity to make the long antic pated assault upon the troops in Boston, by marching our forces over the ic But the other generals of the council of war thought it hazardous, so th attack has been waiting for a more favorable time.

March 4th, Monday. — Saturday evening the house shook with the ro of cannon which our troops were firing upon poor Boston from Lechmere Point [1] and Cobble Hill [2] and Roxbury. The British returned the fire, and shell from their batteries fell on Prospect Hill. Five of our mortars we burst during the bombardment, a great misfortune to us. Yesterday it r mained quiet during the day, but the firing began again toward night. Thr regiments went from here to Roxbury yesterday and carried some fie pieces with them, and cannon also went to Lechmere's Point.

[1] Lechmere's Point, now East Cambridge. — Ed.
[2] Cobble Hill, now Somerville. — Ed.

March 5th. — Last night about seven o'clock firing began again, and immediately a detachment of two thousand men under command of General Thomas marched to Dorchester Heights and took possession. They moved very quietly and worked so rapidly at the entrenchments, that before daybreak this morning they had raised them high enough to cover themselves from the enemy's shot. These works command Boston, and it is expected that General Howe will think it best to evacuate the town very soon, or else come out to meet our soldiers in battle. To-day is the sixth anniversary of the Boston Massacre, and Washington has inflamed the desire of our men for a contest by saying: "Remember, it is the fifth of March, a day never to be forgotten; avenge the death of your brethren." The hills round Boston are covered with eager and anxious spectators waiting for the conflict. As many as four thousand men are under parade near Fort Number Two, commanded by Old Put, and this afternoon they are to embark in boats near the mouth of the river and attack Boston.

March 6th. — A most furious gale of wind yesterday afternoon prevented the anticipated engagement. To-day the rain pours in torrents, and the wind is very rough. The situation of General Howe and his troops is not inviable. Their fleet cannot ride safely in such a turbulent sea, exposed, besides, to the fire of our batteries on Dorchester Heights. These batteries are a source of wonder to the British, who say "they were raised with an expedition equal to that of the genii belonging to Aladdin's Wonderful Lamp." General Howe thinks "the rebels have done more in one night than his whole army would have done in a month," and believes "it must have been the employment of at least twelve thousand men."

March 7th. — Fast Day. General Washington has issued this order: —

HEAD-QUARTERS, CAMBRIDGE, March 6, 1776.

Countersign: Putnam. Parole: Lechmere.

Thursday, the 7th instant, being set apart by the honourable the Legislature of this Province, as a Day of fasting, prayer, and humiliation, "to implore the Lord and Giver of all victory, to pardon our manifold sins and wickednesses and that it would please him to bless the Continental arms with his divine favour and protection," all officers and soldiers are strictly enjoined to pay all due reverence and attention on that day to the sacred duties to the Lord of hosts for his mercies already received and for those blessings which our holiness and uprightness of life can alone encourage us to hope through his mercy to obtain." Our meeting-house was well filled, and Dr. Appleton preached a sermon full of earnestness and devotion, setting before us our manifold causes for humiliation before God.

March 18th. — Boston is free at last. Yesterday General Howe and his entire force sailed away from the wharves in a great number of boats. Immediately General Putnam with several regiments crossed the river and landed at Sewall's Point. Sentinels were apparently standing at their posts on Bunker Hill, but on closer view were found to be wooden men left b the retreating troops to mislead us. When the hoax was discovered a grea shout of joy arose, and the cry went out, "Boston is ours! Boston is ours! The evacuation was looked for several days ago, and was probably hastene by the erection of a battery on Nook's Hill, the part of Dorchester neares Boston, specially dreaded by General Howe since it completely command the town. A terrible cannonade was kept up a great part of the tim from the first occupation of Dorchester Heights till the departure of th King's troops. To-day General Washington entered the town, accompanie by Mrs. Washington. He has ordered General Heath to assume the com mand of five regiments and a portion of artillery and march immediately t New York, as it is thought that town will be the next object of British in vestment. The fleet is still in Nantasket Roads, much to our annoyance.

March 19th. — Boston is not much injured outwardly, I believe. Most o of the houses remain as they were, a few old wooden buildings only havin been pulled down for fuel. General Washington will not allow any perso to enter the town without a pass, owing to the prevalence of small-pox, an has issued order that "as soon as the selectmen report the town to b cleansed from infection, liberty will be given to those who have busines there to go in. The inhabitants belonging to the town will be permitted t return to their habitations, proper persons being appointed at the Neck an at Charlestown Ferry, to grant them passes."

March 20th. — The main body of the army entered Boston to-day. A they marched through the streets so long closed against them, doors an windows were crowded with the long imprisoned people, whose faces brigh ened with welcome as they passed. After eleven months' siege, meanin as it did for them, cruelty and insult and want, how glad to their ears wer the sounds of soldiers' tread, keeping time to the music of Yankee Doodl and the shouts of American regiments, as cheer after cheer was borne upo the air. With drums beating and colors flying, they traversed the town fro end to end. Universal joy prevails at the recovery of this town, which ha been contended for by both armies, and which Great Britain consider of enough importance to spend millions of money for its possession.

March 21st. — General Washington has issued a proclamation to the peop of Boston, and the troops which are quartered there, assuring the former o the good will of the army, and calling upon them to give information of an provisions or military stores that may have been hidden by the retreatin army. It also charges the officers to do all in their power to bring peac and good order out of the confusion that reigns at present.

March 23d. — The town is open for all who wish to go in, and yesterday a immense concourse of people from all the surrounding country crowded th streets. Many went from curiosity, others to see again the friends and rela tives they had so long been parted from. It was very touching to witnes the tearful meeting of mothers with their children, of sisters and brothe whom the terrors and sufferings of the past months have kept ignorant of one another's condition. Washington was overwhelmed with expressions of gratitude, and was addressed by the selectmen in the name of the people. They said: "Next to the divine power, we ascribe to your wisdom that this acquisition has been made with so little effusion of human blood." The chief replied in graceful words, commending their wonderful and heroic patriotism and endurance, and ascribing this victory more to the courage and skill of the soldiers than to himself. There have been less than twenty men killed in our army during all the months since Washington assumed the command. This is remarkable: so large a victory at so small a price!

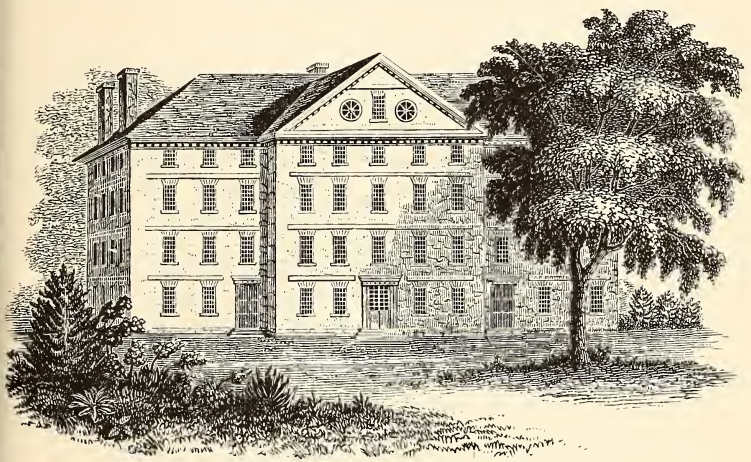
March 27th. — Most of the British fleet, which has been lying outside the harbor for the last ten days, has at last spread its sails and moved away.



Hollis Hall, completed 1763.

This is what Washington has been waiting for, before ordering the army to the south. To-day a brigade under General Sullivan has marched. Congress, on the motion of Mr. John Adams, have "resolved that the thanks of Congress in their own name, and in the name of the Thirteen United Colonies whom they represent, be presented to his Excellency General Washington, and the officers and soldiers under his command, for their wise and spirited conduct in the siege and acquisition of Boston, and that a medal of gold be struck in commemoration of this great event, and presented to his Excellency; and that a committee of three be appointed to prepare a letter of thanks and a proper device for the medal." Our noble Commander-in-chief has disclaimed all merit of the victory, and transferred the praise to the men under his command. He said: "They were, indeed, at first, a band of un-disciplined husbandmen; but it is, under God, to their bravery and attention to duty, that I am indebted for that success which has procured me the only reward I wish to receive — the affection and esteem of my countrymen."

March 29th. — Another address of congratulation and commendation to General Washington. This from the two branches of the legislature combined. They say: "Go on, still go on, approved by Heaven, — revered by all good men, and dreaded by tyrants; may future generations, in the peaceful enjoyment of that freedom which your sword shall have established, raise the most lasting monuments to the name of Washington." Yesterday he attended the long-established Thursday lecture, which Boston has kept up since the days of Winthrop and Wilson, but which the troubles of the last months have interrupted. It was a season of joyful gratitude to God, who had delivered this New England Zion from the power of its oppressor, and had brought peace and quietness once more into its homes. The good old town they call "a tabernacle that should never be taken down, of which not one of the stakes should ever be removed, nor one of the cords be broken."

April 4th. — To-day General Washington has left Cambridge and gone to New York. All the troops, with the exception of five regiments under the command of General Ward, have left with him. It is feared that the British fleet may return, after putting us off our guard, and works are building rapidly in defense of the harbor. General Ward has stationed two regiments in Boston, one at Dorchester Heights, one at Charlestown, and one at Beverly.

April 7th, Sunday. — Dr. Appleton preached to-day from Proverbs xxii. 1: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." A beautiful sermon, alluding tenderly and with reverence to our beloved Commander-in-chief, who has gloriously earned all the affection which is lavished upon him, whose name will live in New England hearts forever, as that of our deliverer from slavery. The good Doctor applied the text to us individually and as a nation, urging us to see to it that history, as she sends our record to the future, writes only of truth, godliness, and courage, untainted by covetousness, or cowardice, or deceit.

Boston, April 10th. — Here I am in our much-suffering town, which is cleared at last of its persecutors. Mrs. McHenry invited me to accompany her husband and herself yesterday to spend a few days with her sister, and I gladly embraced the opportunity. The eight miles' ride seemed longer than ever in our impatience to stand once more in the streets consecrated by the blood of martyrs. At the Neck we passed the British fortifications, and looked upon the works on Dorchester Heights, which were so great a source of terror to General Howe's troops, and which effectually drove them away from our shores. We rode through Orange and Newbury streets [1] to [1] Orange, Newbury, Marlborough streets and Cornhill formed what is now Washington Street. — Ed.

Hanover Square,[1] and there our eyes were saddened by the sight of — not the grand old Liberty Tree which has spread its limbs for more than a hundred years — but only its stump. Of all the magnificent trees in this elm neighborhood, this was the finest of them all, but its name and the remembrance of the many treasonable acts it has sanctioned in Liberty Hall,[2] were enough to enlist against it the detestation of British soldiers. Last August it fell a victim to the ax, and provided for the comfort of its destroyers full fourteen cords of wood. From Newbury Street we passed into Marlborough Street, and stopped in front of the Old South Church. This has been deserated by the soldiers, who used it as a riding school, covering the floors with many hundred cart-loads of gravel, after removing the pulpit and pews, which they used as fuel. Many of the valuable papers and books of Rev. Thomas Prince, which were kept in the tower, were used to kindle fires for the lawless soldiery, and the parsonage adjoining, with several noble sycamore trees in front, were pulled down for firewood.

Turning toward our left hand, the Old Province House reared its stately walls before us, every brick of which was made thousands of miles away in Holland, and was brought across the rolling ocean nearly a hundred years ago, by Mr. Peter Sargeant, whose initials, with the year of its erection, stand forth prominently in the iron fence which surmounts the portico : —

16 P. S. 79

How many governors, appointed by his Majesty to rule our new rebellious Colony, have, during the last sixty years, ascended those massive steps ! Often have they stood upon the balcony in front to address the throng of loyal colonists in the street below, and in response to their loud huzzas, bowed in courtly dignity. The old building remains the same as when they held their grand levees within its fine apartments, and received homage as viceroys of the King, but we fondly believe that the times have so far changed that Sir William Howe will be the very last of his Majesty's representatives whose authority will be respected in Massachusetts. Here he held consultation with General Gage before the disastrous battle of Bunker Hill, and from the cupola which crowns the summit, he watched the approach of our besieging army, before which, at last, he beat an ignominious retreat. The gilded Indian which acts as weather-vane, was pointing his arrow directly east as we passed, and over him and the mansion he faithfully guarded, floated our Union flag of thirteen stripes. Continuing our journey through Marlborough Street to the State House, above which waved the same glorious banner, we looked down King Street, where the memorable Massacre took place six years ago. Up Cornhill, past the shop of Paul Revere, the intrepid patriot and skilful mechanic, into Queen Street, and then we paused at the foot of Pemberton Hill. The hill is terraced, and a long flight of steps leads to the magnificent mansion on its brow.[1] The grounds are tastefully laid out, nature and art uniting to make this one of the finest private residences in Boston. Lord Percy, I believe, lived here during a part of his stay in town. Then we passed on to our destination on Beacon Hill. Mrs. McHenry's sister, Mrs. Elwyn, received us most cordially. Her home is not far from Mr. Hancock's house, and overlooks the Common, which affords pasturage for numberless cows, which make continual music with the tinkling of their bells and their contented lowing from morning till night. These fifty acres of hills and valleys reach from the granary graveyard on the one side, to the ebb and flow of the busy Charles river, which washes the lower end. Grand old trees shade its walks in the summer months, and now are beginning to awake after a winter's sleep, and put forth delicate buds in token of life. The great elm which has watched the growth of the town from its earliest settlement, is still as strong and full of vigor as ever. This morning we have been sauntering through the grounds so lately covered with the camp of the British troops. Walked up Frog Lane to Common Street, and turned into Blott's Lane, past the house of Sam Adams; thence back to the enclosure, crossing which we found ourselves in front of Mr. Hancock's house, which was occupied by General Clinton and Lord Percy at different times during the siege. The house and stables were both used for the wounded after Bunker Hill battle. The magnificent mansion, standing, as it does, on the brow of the hill, commanding an extensive view of the country around, is typical of the prominence and exalted station of its owner, who has incurred the deadly displeasure of the royal government, by reason of his determined patriotism. After the Lexington affair the house was pillaged by the soldiers, who broke down the fences and did some slight damage in other ways. It has been repaired however, and looks now as in the good old days before British tyranny crushed our liberties to the ground. The same massive stone walls, supporting a tiled roof, from which several dormer windows look forth upon the town and its surroundings: the same projecting balcony over the front door the same broad stone steps and paved walk leading from the street, so often trodden by old Thomas Hancock and pranced over by the boyish feet of President Hancock, thirty years ago. We went over the house, into the grand drawing-room at the right, where hang portraits of the Hancock family, back to the days of the early Puritans; into the immense dining-hall opening out of this, designed for large companies; into the family drawing-room at the left of the entrance, and the smaller dining-room out of it and through the spacious halls and chambers elegantly furnished and hung with pictures of various kinds. Things are not injured nearly as much as was feared. The furniture and pictures are in good condition. This afternoon Mrs. Elwyn took us to drive through the North End. We passed through Common Street[1] to School Street, and stopped at King's Chapel. Here we found ourselves on the oldest ground probably, built upon in Boston. The British officers worshipped in the chapel during the occupation of Boston by their troops, and when they evacuated the town, Dr. Caner, its rector, went with them to Halifax, taking with him all the church registers, plate, and vestments. His residence is just north of the chapel. We alighted at the old burying ground, and walked reverently among the graves, some of them a century old; read the inscription upon the monument to Rev. John Cotton, the first minister of the church, as well as that of old Governor Winthrop of beloved memory. On Long Acre we rode over the same ground where, one year ago this month, Lord Percy's brigade formed in line of march to hasten to the assistance of the royal troops in Lexington. Looking down School Street the old Latin School rose before us. Here Dr. Franklin went to school for a year, and John Hancock was taught in childhood. The appearance of Percy's troops on that memorable April morning, stretching their glittering length past School Street, was the signal to dismiss the awe-struck scholars who, as a school, have never met since. We rode through Tremont Street into Gay Alley,[2] and paused a moment at the handsome new church, built only four years ago. Dr. Cooper, its pastor, a true-hearted patriot, left Boston after Lexington fight, and General Gage quartered a British regiment here for a while. But services were sometimes held in Brattle Church during the siege. It did not escape in the bombardment of the town, having been struck by a twenty-four pound cannon ball from our batteries at Lechmere's Point. At our right stood Faneuil Hall, the Cradle of Liberty, whose walls have echoed the burning words of Otis, and Adams, and Warren. Turning into Middle Street,[3] we passed the residence of Dr. Warren, where, as a skilful physician, no less than a warm and earnest patriot, he attracted to himself the affection and esteem of his townsmen. In our ride we passed the Orange Tree Tavern,[4] the houses of Paul Revere and James Otis, and the Green Dragon Tavern, where "treasonable" meetings were held by Boston mechanics for the purpose of conferring as to the best methods of thwarting the movements of the Tories and the British soldiers. These meetings were very secret, the subject discussed being made known to only a few of the leading patriots, like Hancock, Adams, Warren, Otis, Church. But unaccountable as it seemed, General Gage was always informed of their movements, and not till the arrest of Dr. Church did the mystery explain itself. Then it was easy to trace the treachery.

[1] Hanover Square, where Essex, Washington, and Boylston streets meet. — Ed.

[2] The ground around the tree was familiarly known as Liberty Hall. — Ed.

[1] Afterwards the residence of Gardner Greene. — Ed.

The North Church was full of interest to us as the place where the lanterns hung and flashed forth their warning light to the eyes of the waiting

[1] Common Street, Long Acre, and Tremont Street, are now Tremont Street. — Ed.
[2] Gay Alley, an old name for Brattle Street. — Ed.
[3] Now Hanover Street. — Ed.
[4] The Orange Tree Tavern stood on what is now the corner of Court and Hanover Streets. — Ed.

Paul Revere, on the evening of April 18, 1775.[1] On the opposite Charles town shore he paced impatiently back and forth, casting many a look toward the spire which for fifty years had pointed upward with steady finger. At last the signal flamed forth through the darkness, and the midnight rider sprang to his horse and was off on his patriotic errand. Here on Copp's Hill were British redoubts, behind which, June 17th, our soldiers on Bunker Hill were fired upon, and on that day so full of disaster to the royal troops the hill and all houses near were covered with eager spectators of the battle. General Gage witnessed the affair from the steeple of the North Church they say. I must not forget the graves in Copp's Hill Cemetery, through which we walked. Here are buried Dr. Increase Mather and his son Rev. Cotton Mather, and many others, who have filled places of honor in church and state. Some of the graves are fully a hundred and fifty years old. Major Pitcairn of Lexington fame, who was killed at Bunker Hill by the bullet of a negro soldier, is interred under Christ Church. They say the British major was a brave officer, just and impartial in his treatment of his soldiers, and greatly beloved by them. He fell mortally wounded into the arms of his son, who bore him in a boat across the river, to a house near the ferry. General Gage, it is said, sent his own physician to attend him, but he lived but a short time. We passed the fine old mansion of Governor Hutchinson, which was so injured by the mob ten years ago, during the Stamp Act troubles. Thomas Hutchinson was held in high esteem before the tyrannical conduct of the mother country aroused the spirit of liberty in our Colonies, and the part he played at the beginning of the contest, made him as offensive as before he had been popular. He departed for England two years ago, leaving this grand old house built by his father, the place of his birth and residence for nearly sixty-five years. It is built of brick, with six Corinthian pilasters in front and the crown of Great Britain surmounting each window. The interior is replete with magnificence, and the grounds are extensive and tasteful. The Governor's library, which was of great value, including many choice manuscripts

[1] "Impatient to mount and ride,
Booted and spurred, with a heavy stride
On the opposite shore walked Paul Revere.
Now he patted his horse's side,
Now gazed at the landscape far and near,
Then, impetuous, stamped the earth,
And turned and tightened his saddle-girth;
But mostly he watched with eager search
The belfry-tower of the old North Church,
As it rose above the graves on the hill,
Lonely and spectral and sombre and still.
And lo! as he looks, in the belfry's height
A glimmer, and then a gleam of light!
He springs to the saddle, the bridle he turns,
But lingers and gazes, till full on his sight
A second lamp in the belfry burns." — Longfellow.

nd the furniture which was rich and costly, were destroyed by the enraged ıob, August 26, 1765.

[LETTER FROM DOROTHY DUDLEY TO MISS ESTHER LIVINGSTONE.]

CAMBRIDGE, April 19th, 1776.

MY DEAREST ESTHER, — Your long-promised visit to our little town not ıade yet! I am impatient to show you its beauties now that spring is ɔeeping at us with tearful eyes while all the time her face is rippling with ıughter. You know that this is the first anniversary of the never-to-be-for-ɣotten day which began the dreadful war that is upon us. This year has ɔeen one of severe trial for us all. Of course there has been reason for ɣreat economy both in household expenses and in dress. Tea is a comfort ɔut from us with resolution, though its absence from our tables is cuttingly ɛelt by many. As far as it is possible we patronize only home manufactures, ınd ourselves use the spindle to diminish the necessity for foreign material. The residence among us of so large a body of soldiers has made our life in ɔome sense a military one, our hands, our sympathies, and our time having ɔeen devoted to their interests. I find, in looking over my diary, that the ɛntries are almost without exception relating to the doings of the army,[1] and, ndeed were you with us you would not wonder at this. There have been ıo interests separate from the soldiers', or I ought to say from our country's. Your letter received by Major Heath was very welcome. I am glad you ıave so warm a friendship with Mrs. Hancock. Her sister, Miss Katy Quincy, is expecting to go to Philadelphia in a few weeks, and I hope you will make her acquaintance. She is somewhat older than Mrs. Hancock, who is, I think, the youngest of the family. Mrs. Judge Sewall, you know, ɨs another sister. They are a charming family, and Mr. Quincy is a devoted father, warmly beloved by them all.

You ask for descriptions of some of the persons of note that have favored our town with their presence. First and foremost of all I place our Commander-in-chief, but I am sure you already know from other sources his characteristics, mental and physical. I will only say he has a fine face, a noble manner, and is the personification of truth and uprightness. General Charles Lee you have seen, and need no words of mine to bring before you his tall, lank figure and prominent features, marked by uniform carelessness of the opinion of others. "Old Put" is a rough, fiery genius, ready for hard work whenever and wherever it presents itself, spurring his men on to great achievements, and beloved by them all, because of the good, honest heart hidden behind the prickly burr. General Nathaniel Greene, who has had command under General Lee at Prospect Hill, is the only general, they say, that showed his pleasure at the appointment of Washington to the chief command by addressing words of welcome to him for himself and soldiers upon his arrival at Cambridge. He was a Quaker before the war

[1] The Editor has already expressed his suspicion that another reason may be suggested for this.

called out his fighting genius and awoke his slumbering patriotism. H took his first lessons in the military school by watching the British soldie exercise on Boston Common, and followed them up by vigorous study books and military life as he saw it around him. He learned so rapidly th few generals stand higher in the confidence of his peers than Gener Greene. He is rather a large man, with a face indicating fire and firmnes tempered by the innate goodness which looks out of his clear, quiet ey General Harry Knox is his most intimate and trusted friend. The tw were almost constantly together in days when both were studying the art war, and Mr. Knox kept a bookstore on Cornhill. He, like his friend, is t soul of honor, gentle as well as brave, and possessed of a manly heart bri ming with benevolence. You know our veterans, Ward and Pomeroy, a are well acquainted with that queer little man, our excellent quartermaste general, Thomas Mifflin, who is the right man in the right place, every o agrees. General John Stark, who so distinguished himself in the Fren war, has won commendation by the part he has played this year. At t alarm of war he hastily formed a regiment in New Hampshire and march immediately for our camp; figured bravely at Bunker Hill, and, with his i petuous nature boiling for action, he has been on tiptoe for battle ever sin
He looks much like an Indian with his high cheek-bones and prominc nose, and tall, erect figure, and his soul is as full of courage and as imp tient of restraint as that of any wild son of the forest. His wife, Mo Stark, as he familiarly calls her, followed her husband to camp, and wh our troops occupied Dorchester Heights, at his desire she mounted a hor to watch the passage of his regiment over the river to West Boston, a to be ready at a moment's notice to spread the alarm, if opposition aro Are they not a well-mated pair? General Sullivan is a popular officer, good soldier, and a pleasant gentleman. His quarters were at Winter H
I might go on and enumerate officers who hold honorable places in the s vices, Preble, Heath, Patterson, Arnold, Gates, and others, not as w known; but I fear you will tire of the list.

I thank you for your pleasant pictures of Philadelphia life and sketches the prominent figures there. Some of your great men belong to us. T venerable Franklin, the two Adamses, and your excellent President of C gress, we claim by right of birth. The patriot Sam Adams, the "stirrer of the Revolution," with his nervous energy of tongue and pen, his wit a sarcasm, his dignity and integrity and magnanimity, is second to no one the weight of his influence. His tall, graceful figure and courteous beari are very familiar to Boston people, as are also the features and character John Hancock.

Our winter has been a very quiet one, but little disturbed by the roar cannon and the terrors of bloodshed. But few dinner parties or receptio have broken the monotony. I have been twice to Major Mifflin's; once December to meet Mrs. John Adams; again in January, when her husba as present. Mrs. Adams I cannot enough admire. There is evidence of mind of uncommon clearness, sharpened by reading and study, and a heart arm and true, while her graceful accomplishments make her a lady of more an common attractions. Her husband you know. They seem to be admirably suited to one another. Mrs. Washington held a levee in January nd I was honored with an invitation. Colonel Vassall's house is perhaps e most elegant and spacious in New England,[1] and the reception was verything one could wish. No display, no extravagance; but simple taste uited to the time of universal economy, characterized all the arrangements. he magnificent rooms, elaborately carved and panelled, are becomingly furished, though I believe the whole house is not in common use.

Mrs. Morgan, wife of Dr. Morgan, who is in traitor Church's place as irector-general of the hospital, Mrs. Mifflin, Mrs. Remington, Mrs. Custis, Irs. Gates, Mrs. Trowbridge, Mrs. Appleton and her daughters, Mrs. McHenry, Mrs. Wigglesworth, Mrs. Hastings and Miss Rebecca Hastings, and many others whom you do not know, were there. Several officers were also resent. It was much like the companies at Major Mifflin's, in numbers, and many of the faces were the same.

The event of the spring, the joy which has crowned the patient waiting of he winter, is the evacuation of Boston by General Sir William Howe and his Majesty's troops. It was accomplished with so little bloodshed that we have eep cause for gratitude. Among the throng who greeted Washington on is triumphant entry to the town, March 18th, there were none in sorrow for he loss of dear friends. There have been less than two hundred American ives lost in battle during all the months that British and New England rmies have been confronting one another, and now our Colony, we hope and elieve, is freed from the incubus that has weighed upon her so long, and it nly remains to push from the harbor all remnants of the British navy, to e once more at liberty to breathe. You cannot know what a relief it is to be ble to go and come, feeling sure that the Redcoats are at a distance, and not ikely to burden us again with their presence. Boston is not injured nearly s much as was feared, owing to the orders of General Howe, who allowed o plundering unless the necessities of the army called for it, and whose rders were so strict as to punish with death any disobedience of this command. The soldiers were obliged to pay due attention to dress, and to never appear at parade "without having the hair properly and smoothly clubbed." The officers must wear sashes on duty, and none were to appear under arms with tobacco in their mouths. This one of General Howe's orders gives us a little glimpse of life in the British camp. "The commanding officer is surprised to find the necessity of repeating orders, that long since ought to have been complied with, as the men on all duties appear in the following manner, viz: hair not smooth and badly powdered, several without slings to their firelocks, hats not bound, pouches in a shameful and dirty condition, no frills to their shirts, and their linen very di leggings hanging in a slovenly manner about their knees, some men with uniform stocks, and their arms and accoutrements by no means so clean they ought to be. These unsoldierlike neglects must be immediately re edied."

[1] It is evident that Miss Dudley had not seen the Pepperell and Sparhawk houses at Kittery. — Ed.

I have been spending a few days in Boston with Mrs Elwyn, and dr about the town to look at the changes which have gone on under the Brit rule. The North End is very interesting to me as the place where m plans for the furtherance of American liberty were hatched. Paul Rev and Joseph Warren and James Otis lived in that quarter. At Copp's H we drove up to the cemetery just as a funeral procession was winding way into the enclosure. It was that of a man in the prime of life, as learned afterwards, a Mr. John Williston, who died from the effects privations during the siege. Dr. Mather Byles, who has been pastor Hollis Street Church for more than forty years, made a prayer at the gra and Robert Newman, the sexton of Christ Church, was in attendance. F membering your passion for epitaphs, I copied several from the grave-ston some of them black with age. Here is one : —

"Time, what an empty vapor 'tis,
And days, how swift they fley!
Our life is ever on the wing,
And death is ever nigh.
The moment when our lives begin,
We all begin to die."

Here is another from a stone more than half a century old : "Life's lit stage is a small eminence, inch high, the grave above — that home of m where dwells the multitude. We gaze around, we read their monumen we sigh : and while we sigh, we sink, and are what we deplore." Th lines were on an old monument without name or date, and it was with ficulty I could decipher the words : —

"What is't fond mortal yt thou would'st obtain
By spinning out a painful life of cares;
Thou livest to act thy childhood o're again,
And naught intends but grief and seeing years.
Who leaves this world like me, just in my prime,
Speeds all my business in a * * * time."

I paused at a little grave, my eye caught by my own name, Dorothy, a read on the sunken, aged stone, that

Dorythy Greenough
Aged 4 Years & 8 Monthis
Dyed ye 20 October 1667.

You have heard of Dr. Byles, who is so distinguished for his wit and w dom. He is a descendant of Richard Mather and John Cotton. His s Mather Byles, Jr., rector of Christ Church, was so determined a royalist t he left his flock and sailed for Halifax with the King's troops. The old Doctor was very non-committal in politics, rarely mentioning them, and never introducing the subject in the pulpit. When asked why he so steadfastly avoided it, he said: "I have thrown up four breastworks, behind which I have entrenched myself, neither of which can be enforced. In the first place, I do not understand politics; in the second place, you all do, every man and mother's son of you; in the third place, you have politics all the week, pray let one day in seven be devoted to religion; in the fourth place, I am engaged in work of infinitely greater importance; give me any subject to preach on of more consequence than the truth I bring to you, and I will preach on it, the next Sabbath."

His preaching is very effective, savoring of earnestness and sincerity, and filled with the truth of the Gospel. His manner, too, is attractive, and his voice powerful and melodious. Out of the pulpit he is brimming over with fun, never at a loss for a repartee, and quick to see the ludicrous. It is said that in his young days he made advances to a lady who refused to favor his suit. Afterwards she married a Mr. Quincy, and Dr. Byles, the next time he saw her, remarked: "So, madam, it appears that you prefer a Quincy to Byles." "Yes," she replied, "for if there had been anything worse than biles, God would have afflicted Job with them." At one time, the road in front of his house was in a very bad condition, so that in wet weather the mud was much like the slough we read about in Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress." All his efforts to arouse the town government to remedy the trouble were without success. One day, two of the selectmen, the very ones who had charge of the streets, in riding past the house, found themselves stuck in the mud, and were obliged to alight from the carriage to extricate it from the slough. As they did so, the tall, commanding figure of Dr. Byles appeared before them, and bowing gracefully and respectfully, he said: "Gentlemen, I have often complained to you of this nuisance, without any attention being paid to it, and I am very glad to see you stirring in this matter now." The good old Doctor has made many an enemy by his unsparing sarcasm, which he cannot forbear using, even if it cuts its victim to the quick. His family are determined loyalists, every one; and public opinion says, if Dr. Mather Byles did not close his mouth so tight, in political matters, Tory principles would be sure to find utterance.

Dr. Byles is a poet of no mean fame, having written many verses of both a serious and trifling nature. On one occasion Governor Belcher, who was a warm friend and admirer of the Doctor's, invited him to visit the Province of Maine in his company. Doctor Byles declined, but the Governor, nothing daunted by the refusal, set himself to work to devise some way of securing the wished-for pleasure. He persuaded the punning parson[1] to take

[1] Dr. Byles's humor is celebrated in a poetical account of the clergy of Boston, quoted by Mr. Samuel Kettell, in his Specimens of American Poetry:—

"There 's punning Byles, provokes our smiles,
A man of stately parts;

tea, one Sabbath afternoon, on board the Scarborough ship-of-war, and a the friends were cosily seated at table, engaged in conversation and quaffin fragrant draughts of steaming hyson, slowly but surely the ship was carry ing them out to sea. When the Doctor discovered the stratagem, he resigne himself to the voyage with a very good grace. The next Sabbath, in lack o a suitable hymn for service at sea, he composed a very excellent one, th first stanza of which I remember : —

"Great God, thy works our wonder raise;
To thee our swelling notes belong;
While skies, and winds, and rocks, and seas,
Around shall echo to our song."

Almost every Tory has taken his departure from Boston with the Britis soldiers. There are none to be seen in the streets in this time of gener thanksgiving, and except for the manifest signs of suffering consequent upo the reign of war, the town looks as in the far away days of peace.

April 20th. — If you were with me this lovely spring day we would pe suade Tony Vassall, the quondam coachman of Mrs. Penelope Vassall, t drive us about the town. It seems very lonely since the tents have disa peared, and with them the soldiers whose busy life was incorporated wit our own for nearly a twelve-month. Since you cannot see Cambridge a it looks to-day, let my eyes do service instead, and, if you enlist your ima ination, perhaps you will be able to discern the picture. First, you mu look at our college halls, now vacant. They rear their walls of brick a proudly as if conscious of their importance to the world of letters. Yo know they did good service during the last year, sheltering nearly tw thousand soldiers from the snows and blows of winter. We will let Tor drive us slowly past the meeting-house, where Dr. Nathaniel Appleto has preached for twenty years, and for nearly forty years previous in th old meeting-house, of which this takes the place. Dr. Increase Math preached his installation sermon, and Dr. Cotton Mather extended the rig hand of fellowship. The good Doctor has lived for more than foursco years, and we fear he must leave us before long. Here the first Pr vincial Congress of Massachusetts was held, until adjourned to Watertow and here for many years the College Commencements were celebrated midsummer. Look across the road to the court-house, which lifts i tower high in the air as a warning, perhaps, to miscreants. We turn t corner, past the stately tree which for years has outstretched its shelteri arms over the heads of passing man and beasts, and come abruptly up

He visits folks to crack his jokes,
Which never mend their hearts.

"With strutting gait, and wig so great
He walks along the streets,
And throws out wit, or what's like it,
To every one he meets." — Ed.

The Washington House

the president's house, which has harbored all the revered men who stoo at the head of the College Faculty since President Wadsworth. Ridin slowly toward the east we come next to Professor Wigglesworth's hous which is very old, having been built, I have heard, by old President Lev erett, before this century came in. The worthy professor is a great studen as was his father, the first Hollis Professor of Divinity in the college, and, i proof of this, there is a hole worn through the floor by their feet under th desk of the room used, by father and son, as a study. Next to this interes ing house is the old parsonage, which has stood for a hundred years: th residence of Dr. Urian Oakes, who was not only pastor of the church, bu college president as well; of Rev. Nathaniel Gookin and Rev. Williar Brattle, as well as our present beloved and aged pastor, Dr. Appleto This venerable house has undergone some repairs which have materiall altered its appearance and freshened its life. Long may it stand as a re minder of the lives of the holy men who have done so much for Cambridg by their influence and their labors.

Now Tony will turn the horse's head toward the right and we will rid down to Butler's Hill, past Mr. Dana's house, which is a noble mansion s in the midst of orchards and grounds which are finely cultivated. Furth down we come to Mr. Inman's estate, which, since the departure of th soldiers, has been occupied by two ladies, one of them Miss Betsey Murra a niece of Mrs. Inman's, though the fact of her being there is a secre known only to a few. Mr. Ralph Inman you have often heard of as one the aristocrats of our town, and members of Christ Church. Mrs. Inm is really a remarkable woman. She belongs to the Murray family, whi proudly dates back to the Norman conquest in England, and claims kindr blood with the Philiphaugh family of Murrays in Selkirkshire. She is stanch Scotch woman, and has the energy of character and charmi frankness and honesty so common to that people. She has crossed th ocean many times in company with her brother, Mr. James Murray, a ge tleman of upright character and great success as a merchant. She h been three times married; to Mr. Inman about five years since. When sh was Elizabeth Murray, I have been told that she carried on business in shop, corner of Queen Street and Cornhill in Boston, and made for hers a very comfortable income, and during her first two marriages she conti ued the business, and still owns the building. Her property, acquired her own exertions, is considerable, and her husband, Mr. Smith, left her h whole estate, so that she has had all the comforts and luxuries of wealt She is classed among the Tories because of her associations with the Br ish officers of government, her husband, Mr. Inman, having been an a dresser to General Gage last year. Her education and social advantag have united to make her a most delightful companion, and one whose pr ence was eagerly sought. She has remained in this vicinity during all t troubles, though Mr. Inman fled into Boston, and owing to her acquaintan with General Putnam, Major Mifflin, and others among our officers, has been secured from molestation by our soldiers. I heard to-day that General Putnam deputed his son to remain in Cambridge on the day of Bunker Hill battle, to guard Mrs. Inman — a proof certainly of the high regard he entertained for her.

The house is large and elegant in its appointments, but now the air of carelessness which is visible around the place is very sad. Barracks disfigure the eastern border of the grounds, and here and there we come upon traces of soldiers' life. Everywhere in our ride we see the evidences of war. Cambridge lines stretch themselves from Butler's Hill to the river, and forts are plentifully sprinkled over the town for our protection. Turning our horse around (for at Mr. Inman's farm we find ourselves at the limit of civilization in Cambridge), we drive back to Butler's Hill. On this eminence you can have a good view of our fortified town. Do you see that redoubt at our left, just at the bend of the river? That is Fort Number One.[1] We would drive around by it and follow the course of the river to the causeway from Boston, if the road was sufficiently travelled to render it pleasant riding. But only heavy country wagons laden with produce ever come into this part of our village. So Tony gives the pony a smart touch with the whip, and soon we are in front of Colonel Phipps's handsome house whose grounds extend down to the river. Colonel David Phipps is a brother, you know, of Mrs. Vassall, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Lechmere, and Mrs. Boardman. His house was taken last spring when he left the town for Boston, and was used as a hospital during the summer. Look at those wooden Indians standing guard upon the gate posts, barbarous in dress and expression, deliberately taking aim with unerring arrow at the heads of unwelcome guests. They are a source of terror to many childish minds, believing, as they do, that these savage sentinels are specially devoted to the destruction of naughty children; and the road past their domain is traversed by flying feet when necessity makes it a road to duty.

Pursuing our journey, we pass the house some people say President Dunster occupied at one time, though he lived, I believe, in the old college house in the college yard during most of his presidency; through the square to Judge Remington's house, past the jail and the jailer's house to the road which is the thoroughfare from Boston. Looking down toward the river you see the tavern kept by Ebenezer Bradish, so popular an inn particularly at Commencement seasons, and which the students were wont to patronize so freely. Here we are at the borders of the Brattle grounds, which are unique in their elegance, and which by the departure of both father and son are left to be used by our government. They extend down to the river, and toward the west to the estate of the Widow Vassall. A private driveway leads up to the substantial house which stands as sentinel in the centre of the grounds. We will turn to the right and pass again the courthouse, and meeting-house, old Massachusetts, Stoughton, and Harvard, little Holden Chapel, and Hollis halls, till we reach the gambrel-roofed house, which shields itself behind a row of Lombardy poplars, at the further limits of the college green, beyond the road to Charlestown. This is Mr. Hastings's house, famous as the head-quarters of the Committee of Safety, and honored often by the presence of Washington during his residence in Cambridge. On the opposite side of the Common we see the magnificent wide-spreading elm immortalized by our Commander-in-chief, when, standing beneath its shade the third day of last July, he formally assumed the command of all the troops of the Colonies. In a line with this giant tree stand two others which for a century and more have been silent witnesses of the life of the village. These three venerable elms saw the uprising of the old wooden building where gathered the nucleus of Harvard College; they heard the ringing of the desecrating axe as it laid low many of their companions of the forest, and looked on, as the seminary, growing in proportions as in years added, one by one, the more imposing structures which now stand within the college yard. How many stories they could tell us, were their long silence to be broken, of the men of the past who have walked beneath their shade, and how many secrets would be unlocked to us which will never be recorded on history's page! Beneath one of them, the next neighbor to the Washington elm, stood Rev. George Whitefield,[2] I am told, when, thirty years

[1] Present site of The Riverside Press. — Ed.

Holden Chapel.

[1] The Holmes house.— Ed.

[2] This tree, afterwards known as the Whitefield elm, was destroyed a few years ago by the city authorities because it was considered an interruption to the travel on Garden Street. A respite of a few years had been granted it at the earnest solicitation of some to whom the monarchs of the "forego, he visited Cambridge and preached to the students of Harvard. How the venerable tree must have echoed with the eloquence of the ifted preacher, as with burning words he pleaded with his hearers who hronged the Common, beseeching them for Christ's sake to be reconciled o God. North of the Hastings house lived Mr. Moses Richardson, one f the three brave men who were killed one year ago to-day and were so astily buried in the rude grave within the old cemetery. Dr. Warren lit- le thought, when with sympathizing words he promised a better burial to hem, to soothe the grief-stricken friends, that he himself would so soon lie ow, away from the terrors and trials of earth. Some time we hope to raise stone to commemorate their patriotism and heroic death. Further up he road to Menotomy lives Captain Walton of the militia, whose com- any was out, of course, on that day of terror. Tony himself has a snug ittle home on this road, where with his wife, Lucy, and Darby his wide- wake seven-year-old, he has lived since the flight of his mistress. But ew houses are scattered along this road. Mr. Frost's house, a good way eyond, sheltered a number of soldiers while the army was stationed in Cambridge. He, I believe, built the house which Rev. Mr. Serjeant, rector f Christ Church, occupied for a time, and which we are passing now in going from Menotomy Road to Christ Church. Let us ride further, for I would like you to see Church Row, or Tory Row, as latterly it has been called. The Brattle estate we touch, on its western border, as we ride past, Widow Vassall's on our left and Colonel John Vassall's on our right. I nention these houses by the names of their Tory owners, but in reality they have passed from their hands and are now used by our government. Gen- eral Washington has a glorious view from his windows in the magnificent house of his choice. The blue hills stretch their hazy length for several miles along the opposite shore of the river. To-day the sun lights up the dimpling stream with numberless diamond flashes, and over the whole land- scape he has thrown a bright halo of glory. Next above our General's headprimeval" are dear, and the feeling of regret and almost of indignation at its final sacrifice was exten- sive. This sentiment found expression in some lines attributed to the Rev. Nicholas Hoppin, D. D., for many years rector of Christ Church, a few of which are appended. — ED.

"Thy room was wanted, huge old Elm,
Magnate of Nature's realm!
Thou hast stood forth too long,
Putting thy pillared strength
Our rattling courts among;
And thou hast met thy doom at length,
Deserving a lament in nobler song!

"Down, then, with thy enormous bulk,
Thy crazed unwieldly hulk!
This time of rushing haste
Will not abide the old;
Has not a thought to waste
On bygone memories idly told,
Nor brooks one obstacle from age misplaced."

quarters we come to the sometime residence of Judge Richard Lechmere, and later of Judge Jonathan Sewall, both aristocrats and Tories, who lef town some time ago. The Phipps farm, which comprises the eastern part o Cambridge, passed into the hands of Judge Lechmere on his marriage witl Miss Phipps, and it is known often as Lechmere's Point, celebrated as the place of landing of the Redcoats under Pitcairn and Smith, as intent on ar errand of destruction they left Boston one year ago last night. Judge Sewal is a genial, upright gentleman — an intimate friend of our own John Adams though Jonathan and John have politically walked far apart of late. Judge Sewall is now in England. The house is one of the best on this highway which has none but elegant mansions to grace its borders. The limits of the

The Sewall-Riedesel Mansion, before its Alteration.

Sewall estate bring us to Judge Joseph Lee's, where the courteous and affa ble gentleman still lives. Though forced to resign his position as councillo in the troubles of September, 1774, he was allowed to remain in his home provided he would not interfere in politics. This he readily promised, and thus retains the noble house which he has owned for nearly twenty years It is very old, but substantial in its building, looking as if it would outliv many of the younger houses which are hastily erected in this generation He bought it, I have heard, of the widow of Cornelius Waldo and on a win dow pane is found, scratched with a diamond, the name of Daniel Waldo (Rev.) The frame of this mansion was brought from England, not be cause Massachusetts had no trees, but because it was feared that capabl workmen could not be found to put it together to suit the fastidious taste o its owner. The walls are of double thickness, every room being shut of from the one adjoining, by a space of perhaps a foot, enclosed by two soli walls, so that voices can never be heard in the next room unless a door i open. Judge Lee is highly respected as an honorable man, true to his prin ciples, warm in his friendships, and genial and kindly in manner. In m ildish days I used occasionally to visit at his house, and my eyes always ound a world of pleasure to explore in the pleasant rooms hung with land- cape paper and well stocked with pictures and ornaments, while the wide indow seats afforded a resting-place for me to view the surrounding land- cape. I remember with especial pleasure a complete set of linen cover- igs on the furniture and bed in an upper chamber. The gay figures of irds perched upon trees scarcely larger than themselves, the tempting rawberries corresponding in size to the plants by their side, the dogs and eer, and animals I could find no names for, all worked in gorgeous colored orsteds by the aristocratic fingers of Mrs. Lee, these had a peculiar fasci- ation for me.

[1] This house was occupied subsequently, also, by Madame Riedesel, and is now the property of Mr John Brewster. — Ed.

Next in our ride we come to a large square mansion, formerly the resi- ence of Mr. George Ruggles, which he left in affright after the war began, nd on the opposite side of the road stands the house of Lieutenant-Gov- rnor Oliver.[1] We will drive up the broad carriage road and alight at the oor. This lordly house is surrounded by a grove of noble elms and pines, nd by wide lawns which are growing green with the touch of spring. The nterior is in keeping with its outward appearance, grand in proportions, re- minding one of the generous and kindly nature of its proprietor. Of course ve do not find it as in the days of his ownership, for soldiers' feet have trod ts halls and sick men's moans have been heard in its chambers since the leparture of our last royal lieutenant-governor. Its hospital uses interfered n some measure, of course, with the elegance of its former state. Governor Oliver was appointed successor to Andrew Oliver the unpopular lieutenant- governor who died in March, 1774, and was also president of the council of Massachusetts. but owing to the troublous times and the manner of his ap- ointment as councillor, became so obnoxious to the people that he was orced to resign September 2d, only a few months after entering upon his luties. A mob surrounded his house and presented him with a written docu- nent to which they demanded his signature. Persistently he refused, until heir fury became such as to endanger his life and the safety of his family. Then he took the paper. and hastily casting his eyes over its contents, which was a formal resignation of his office, he wrote these words : " My house at Cambridge being surrounded by four thousand people, in compliance with heir commands, I sign my name, Thomas Oliver." Immediately after this he left his Cambridge home and never returned. The field opposite Colonel Oliver's and Captain Ruggles's estates is used as a burying-ground for the brave men who had been wounded at Bunker Hill and died in the two neighboring houses. We are now in Watertown. Shall we ride still further or shall Tony turn the horse and drive us home again ? You have seen a good deal of our beautiful town by proxy, and I hope it will not be long before you see it with your own eyes. Till then, dearest Esther, believe me with tenderest affection, your very sincere friend,

[1] This estate is now the property of Mr. James Russell Lowell. The house was built by Thomas Oliver, between 1763 and 1767. — Ed.

DOROTHY DUDLEY.

May 9th. — Dr. Church and his friends have sent a petition to Congress for his release from prison, as his health is suffering. The plea is granted only on condition that he give his word of honor, with sureties of one thousand pounds, that he will not hold any correspondence with the enemy, and that he be brought to Massachusetts to be in charge of the council of this Colony, and not privileged to go out of its limits without a license.

May 17th. — Fast day, by resolution of Congress. Dr. Appleton preached to us this morning a faithful and patriotic sermon. This evening news comes to us of the capture of one of the British transport ships, Hope (isn't it a misnomer?) by the schooner Franklin, commanded by Captain James Mugford of Marblehead. It is a prize worth capturing, containing as it does, fifteen hundred barrels of powder and other valuable loading and one thousand carbines.

May 20th. — Yesterday there was a sharp battle in the harbor. The British navy, it seems, will not let Hope go without a struggle, and last night about thirteen boats from the men-of-war at Nantasket attacked the Franklin, and a small privateer, the Lady Washington, anchored near, and there was determined fighting on both sides. Two of the enemy's boats were sunk. Brave Captain Mugford was mortally wounded, but still kept up the courage of his men, crying: "Do not give up the ship, — you will beat them off!" They did beat them off, but the noble captain did not live to see the victory. He was the only man killed on our side. To-day they have carried him to his home in Marblehead, to bury him.

May 28th. — Massachusetts has taken the lead in the movement for independence. There is scarcely anything else spoken of. The Provincial Congress, May 10th, acted in reference to it, and our town held a meeting the other day, the record of which my friend, the town clerk, has copied for me.

"CAMBRIDGE, May 27th 1776.

"At a meeting of the Freeholders & other Inhabitants of the Town Legally warned to Instruct & advise their Representatives, whether, that the Honbl Congress should for the Safety of the Colonies declare them Independent of the Kingdom of Great Britain, they the said Inhabitants will solemnly engage with their Lives & Fortunes to Support them in the Measure.

"Capt Ebenezer Stedman chosen Moderator.

"Unanimously voted, Whereas in the late House of Representatives of this Colony May 10th 1776, it was Resolved as the Opinion of that House that the Inhabitants of each Town in this Colony ought in full Town Meeting warned for that purpose, to advise the Person or Persons who shall be nosen to Represent them in the next General Court, whether that if the onorable Congress should for the Safety of the said Colonies declare them ndependant of the Kingdom of great Britain, they the said Inhabitants will olemnly engage with their Lives & Fortunes to support them in the meas-re.

"We the Inhabitants of the Town of Cambridge in full Town meeting as-embled, & warned for the Purpose aforesaid, do solemnly engage with our ives & Fortunes to support them in the Measure."

June 13th. — When are we to be rid of the British fleet? Our harbor has ven space to them surely long enough. They say there are several hun-red Highlanders, on board the eight ships, two brigs, and one schooner, hich compose it. General Benjamin Lincoln has a plan for driving them ff to sea, and to-day orders were given to the people of Boston, to build ortifications in the lower harbor, in anticipation of any trouble. Troops ave embarked for Pettick's Island and Hull, about six hundred men at ach place, and bodies of militia and artillery are stationed on Moon Island, t Hoff's Neck, and at Point Alderton. On Long Island, also, a detach-ent is posted, with two eighteen pound guns, and a thirteen inch mortar. olonel Whitcomb commands the whole.

First Stoughton Hall. (Taken down 1780.)

June 14th. — This morning the fleet was fired upon from Long Island, nd returned the fire with vigor. At last one of the ships was pierced with shot, and the Commodore gave orders to put to sea, which was done im-ediately, after first blowing up the light-house. Just two years to-day-ince Boston harbor was closed by British tyranny to American vessels! he anniversary is celebrated by the expulsion of his Majesty's ships from the same bay, which will not hold them again we hope, unless as prisoners of war.

June 17th. — At last the students have come back, after a banishment of fourteen months from their college halls. It seems like old times to see the college yard dotted with familiar forms, wending their way, books in hand, from Massachusetts to Harvard, from Hollis to Stoughton and Holden, and promenading through the grounds which our brave Bluecoats so lately trod with martial step and soldiers' bearing. Their home in Concord was without many of the comforts and conveniences they had come to consider necessary to successful study. No halls; but few books, or maps, or apparatus, to aid them up the hill of learning; no wonder that the privilege of return to the college is hailed with joy. It is a time of general thanksgiving, and yesterday our honored President preached a sermon full of gratitude to our Heavenly Father, who has so kindly cared for the interests of Harvard, and brought it back again to its ancient home. Good old Dr. Watts's hymn on God's condescension to human affairs, never seemed more appropriate than when it rung out to the music of manly voices, through the Sabbath stillness, waking an answering song of praise, from the birds, the winged worshippers in God's outer temple of nature: —

"1 Up to the Lord that reigns on high,
And views the nations from afar,
Let everlasting praises fly,
And tell how large His bounties are.

2 [He that can shake the worlds He made,
Or with His word or with His rod,
His goodness, how amazing great!
And what a condescending God!]

3 [God that must stoop to view the skies,
And bow to see what angels do,
Down to the earth He casts His eyes,
And bends His footsteps downwards too.]

4 He overrules all mortal things,
And manages our mean affairs;
On humble souls the King of Kings
Bestows His counsels and His cares.

5 Our sorrows and our tears we pour,
Into the bosom of our God;
He hears us in the mournful hour,
And helps to bear the heavy load.

6 In vain might lofty princes try
Such condescension to perform!
For worms were never raised so high
Above their meanest fellow-worm.

7 Oh! could our thankful hearts devise
A tribute equal to Thy grace,
To the third heav'n our songs should rise,
And teach the golden harps Thy praise."

Most of the students were present, and the meeting-house was full. To-day is the first anniversary of the battle which cost us the loss of General Joseph Warren, of fragrant memory, and with him many soldiers brave and loyal to their country. These anniversaries are sad, and yet there is an element of thankfulness in our feelings, as we remember the honors so gloriously earned by our noble men, and the proofs given to all the world, of their patriotism and unflinching courage.

July 3d. — Another anniversary, not of a contest of arms, but of an occasion of very great importance to the country. Just one year to-day since General Washington, under the superb elm which we love to call by his name, formally assumed the command of our immense body of armed men. An army it could scarcely be called, it was so sadly in need of all the requisite implements of war, and the discipline which his firm hand and wise head brought to the disorderly mass. At this distance of time we can more easily understand the dreadful difficulties he had to surmount to preserve the appearance of a well-equipped army in the eyes of the Redcoats under Sir William Howe. For eleven months they stood in awe of our guns, and would not venture forth from beleaguered Boston to attack the surrounding strongholds. Their final evacuation on St. Patrick's Day was regarded with astonishment in England, where the indomitable perseverance and unequalled skill of our great general are not understood. Mr. Hancock's letter to General Washington, on that occasion, expressed the universal feeling of gratitude and admiration extended to him : —

"PHILADELPHIA, 2d April, 1776.

"SIR, — It gives me the most sensible pleasure to convey to you, by order of Congress, the only tribute which a free people will ever consent to pay, the tribute of thanks and gratitude to their friends and benefactors. The disinterested and patriotic principles, which led you to the field, have also led you to glory ; and it affords no little consolation to your countrymen to reflect, that, as a peculiar greatness of mind induced you to decline any compensation for serving them, except the pleasure of promoting their happiness, they may without your permission, bestow upon you the largest share of their affections and esteem.

"Those pages in the annals of America will record your title to a conspicuous place in the temple of fame, which shall inform posterity, that, under your direction, an undisciplined band of husbandmen in the course of a few months became soldiers ; and that the desolation meditated against the country by a brave army of veterans, commanded by the most experienced generals, but employed by bad men in the worst of causes, was, by the fortitude of your troops, and the address of their officers, next to the kind interposition of Providence, confined for near a year within such narrow limits, as scarcely to admit more room than was necessary for the encampments and fortifications they lately abandoned. Accept, therefore,

Sir, the thanks of the United Colonies, unanimously declared by their del gates to be due to you, and the brave officers and troops under your cor mand ; and be pleased to communicate to them this distinguished mark the approbation of their country. The Congress have ordered a golde medal, adapted to the occasion, to be struck, and when finished, to be pr sented to you.

"I have the honor to be, with every sentiment of esteem, Sir, your mo obedient and very humble servant,

"JOHN HANCOCK, President."

July 5th. — My friend Esther Livingstone has sent me copies of tw letters from Mr. Edmund Quincy,[1] to his daughter Katy. Esther has becon well acquainted with Miss Quincy, and knowing the interest they wou possess for me, begged to be allowed to copy the letters for my pleasure.

"LANCASTER, May 27th, 1776

"TO MISS KATY QUINCY.

"Dear Child. — As you are called in the Providence of God, to take long a journey as from hence to Philada at ye request of Mr. Hancock yr Sister, to accompy & be a comfort to her who by ye same providence h been conducted thither & there it's probable she may have her residence, y for some considerable time, if ye present civil war should by Him be pe mitted to continue to another year. I am to wish you a safe & comfortal journey, & that it may prove advantageous to yr health, & that ye m meet yr Br & Sr in an equal enjoyment of theirs.

"The parent country and these united provinces are doubtless for ve wise reasons & ends suffered to be involved in one common calamity, that a civil & bloody war. Yet we have great cause of thankfulness in this pro ince especially in wh ye war began: (1775 Apr. 19) having on ye 17th March last been kindly delivered (nearly without bloodshed) from so large no of troops collected in our Capital wh, as you know, I have always view as a merciful token of a General hopeless Evacuation of ye most atrocious savage as well as impolitic undertaking to subjugate 3 mills of people, dista 3200 geographic miles, united in 13 colonies ; nor is anything similar to found in either antient or modern History. Those who may live to see ye clo of ye present century * * * * will doubtless discern that in infinite wisdo & goodness God has permitted ye present evil day to overtake us. * * * Much division is unhappily occasioned among Friends, & some large soc

[1] Edmund Quincy was graduated at Harvard in 1722. He then went into business with his brot Josiah, and his brother-in-law Edmund Jackson (the husband of "Dorothy Q."). They were v prosperous, having extensive European business relations, and, in 1750, when they dissolved partn ship, divided upwards of $300,000, a large fortune in those days. Josiah Quincy retired to Braintr and retained his property and his portion of the paternal estate ; but Edmund entered business aga with his sons Edmund and Henry. The new firm was unfortunate, and, after 1759, the writer of letter in the text lived in Boston in comparatively restricted circumstances until his death. During t siege he retired to Lancaster. His daughters were remarkable for their beauty. — ED.

ies very much thro' the lust of pride & thirst of power over their Brethren
h. will appear on both sides of the water, to have ye original of ye present range event. Probably as many of this class of aspiring men may have rung from this province as any other & perhaps more as it is certain One nong those who have tho't it best to exile themselves from their native land, s been ever charg'd with acting such a part, thro' the whole of his ıbl admon & upon every private occasion as finally to fix ye foregoing charter upon him, especially among those who have been cotemporary in vernt (who have been numerous he beginning very young) Wt the fatal sue may prove to those who have listed under his Banners, none can tell — is is certain and awful that their Salvation, if obtained, must arise from destruction of ye Liberty of America & probably of mankind. We may scern some things in ye present scene of things, but we are doomed to indness as to the future — we have nevertheless our several parts to act those especially in Government, in these days of trial are indisputably lled in their several departments to provide such means of resistance as ay be judged adequate to that defence we are under the necessity of aking. Still may our confidence be placed on him whose arm alone can ıd will save us, as he has often done our fathers in this land, wm little tter than a howling desert. They were never indeed called to a similar ial but they were more than once in danger of total excision from ye savage ıtions of the wilderness ; yet ye wisest of our predecessors, never surely rmed an Idea of ye possibillity of any B. Europeans making assault upon eir best friends in so savage a manner, no way very dissimilar (except in Naval armament) to the victories of Fire & Sword, wch our fathers sufrd from their Indian enemies, more cruel than ye beasts of prey. I have ten pictured to you what I thought of ye original of ye remarkable change ye Governors of ye B. Nation touching ye subordinates rule among cols. I suspect they will very soon have reason to tremble at ye apoaching breach wth France & Spain. It must prove ye dangerous war G.
. has been for more than a century past involved in. The patriotic D. of ichmond & good B. of St. Asaph have wrote eno to confirm every sensible an in the same sentiments wh they have very freely publd in ye 1774.

"My devout wish is that ye Brit. people may soon see ye Errs of their esent Rulers, & that God may have mercy upon them and early prevent eir final ruin — wh certainly awaits them unless saved by repentance & forma —

"I w'd have yu give me (undr Mr. H & Frank) ye earliest notice of yr safe rival at P. and of his & yr sister's state of health : also chrg Dr. Y. home h his neglect of correspce — if ye effect of an extensive practise it will be me excuse. Dont forget ye pamphlet called ye 2d appeal to Justce of ny 10, last — of wh. we had some clauses in ye Boston paper. — if at ıa upon return of Mr. Bant send me anything wh is worth sending, & Dere Dr. Young to comply with his promise of a copy ye City new government — My best wishes attend you in yr present long journey & hope und Mr. Bants convoy you'll arrive in at least a comfortable manner. If yu shou consent to be inoculated I hope you'll be attended by a skilful Physitian: - at ye same time you'll remember to fix yr chief trust in ye Gt Physitian soul & body. To whose kind providence I commend you & remn Dr Chi yr very affe Fa & Friend."

"Lancaster June 10*th* 1776

"Dear Dr Katy. Since yr departure we've no certain advices from o army in Canada, only that there has been a very important battle betwe them and Carlton's troops & that in genl our army obtains a victory — po sibly the particulars have reached P. ere this will come to hand. We a not a little concerned least Burgoine may have arrived with his troops, tir eno. to prevent our gaining ye fortress of Q. however we must submit to determina of a wise providce, not doubting the issue will be in our fav We hear from Halifax that sickness prevails among the troops there. I a ship there fro G. B. there comes advice that ye Fleet, sail'd for Ameri had met with such bad weather, as to disperse almost ye whole, some wh. had put into Lisbon, others into France & some 1etd. By wch disast possibly a much less formidable force will arrive safe than has been fear by some & wished for by others — it is certain, we have as yet no c tain acct of ye arrival of any large force at Hx nevertheless the fortific tions are going forward at Boston wth vigour, & its expected their streng will be very sufficient to oppose an entrance into ye upper harbour. shd attempt be made by Adml Howe; but I rather think that his grand effo will be agnst N. Yr not by nature so capable of defense as Boston, wh I Br abt 3 mo. ago so unexpectedly and shamelessly evacuated, ye advise wh., we may expect to hear, has been more surprising to ye adml (if arrive than anything he had before met with: as it must have in a great measu disconcerted ye ministerial plan of operation; & should some more of t most important store-ships of Parker's Fleet be lost, or delayed by their pairs in any port wh. they might have made after ye Storm, the summer m prove too short for ye Execution of their infernal design, for it appears me it will deserve no softer Epithet: and I think I know the source, & a very little at a loss, as to ye general issue of the present nonpareil conte versy — The Britons tell us, tho' wth singular impropriety & very lit truth, that they have with great care & expenses, settled, nourished & d fended these No American Cols from their infancy & therefore that th are chargeable wth ye blackest ingratitude as well as ye greatest injustice ye resistance wh. they have dared to make agt ye sovereign authority of B. empire. Administration have, from the first forming of their plan subjugn, flatterd thems. that ye Cols would not unite in an opposition, b ing, as I apprehend, judicially blinded fro. ye beginning, even so far as assure thems. that 13 considerable provinces under a free Govt wd frighted into an immediate compliance wth their demand — upon ye sight

Comparatively Small no. of troops parading in ye Streets of Boston, & a ew large ships in its harbour, ready to cooperate wth the same upon opposi- on. To this egregious blunder of ye B. Govt ye present safety of these A. ols, has been, & is, greatly owing, inasmuch as it has, for several years, revented ye ministry fr. applyg to Pt for such a formidable force as they reaten this year to bring against us. We hear of sundry prize ships, sent to several parts since you left us — 2 sugar ships from Jamaica, one 450. ns — 30 Gentn & ladies passengers — wth 20000 dollars on brd besides a aluable Cargo — ye passengers by agreemt were landed at Providence — this orning advise of a Scotch ship wth a no of highlanders & others near about 40 wth Cargo brot into Salem as soldiers — they are best under our com- and. Let me know if any good manufacrs are hopefully rising in or near . The present Scarcity of B. Commods is & will prove of vast advante to whole Amn Community — tho' a fatal stab to ye B. commerce. To pre- nt ye latter, I presume, admtion has made an argumt of ye apparent danger persuade B. merchants & manufacrs to lend them aid to ye present grand eparations, with many promises of compensa for all their losses out of ye mcan forfeited estates. One wd almost think that Reason as well as vir- e had taken its flight fr the most important ranks of B. Subjects."

July 19th. — Independence is declared at last! The glorious document hich proclaims our Colonies to be free and independent States, has been ad from the balcony of the State House and in Faneuil Hall, and greeted th cheers of welcome from thousands of patriotic throats. The thought of dependence has been a familiar one for many months, and the fiery enthu- sm which now flames forth from all quarters tells of the universal joy of e nation. The seventh day of June Mr. Richard Henry Lee of Virginia ade a motion in Congress, that "these United Colonies are and of right ght to be free and independent States," and proposed that they dissolve connection with the mother country. The question was debated vigor- sly and eloquently, and on the eleventh of June a committee, consisting of homas Jefferson of Virginia, John Adams of our own Colony, Benjamin anklin of Pennsylvania, Roger Sherman of Connecticut, and Robert R. vingston of New York, was appointed to draft a Declaration of Independ- ce. Each member of the committee drew up such a paper as expressed ; own views and feelings, and then the five met for consultation. Mr. Jef- son's paper was read first, and so entirely met the approval of the others, t it was unanimously adopted as being in every way superior to their own. is was reported to Congress, and after being discussed several days and ghtly altered, was agreed to on the fourth day of July. The streets of iladelphia, on that day, were filled with eager crowds, waiting to know the ision of Congress. The bell-ringer of the State House stood at his post the steeple, from the early morning, that he might be prompt to announce he people that their independence was formally declared. His little boy was stationed where he could get the earliest news of the event and at las as the old man grew impatient at the long delay, the boyish voice run through the air: "Ring! Ring, Father! Ring!" And then the bells se forth a triumphant peal which was answered by shouts of joy from the e cited multitude. The declaration thus concludes: "We, therefore, t representatives of the United States of America in General Congress asser bled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of o intentions, do, in the name, and by the authority of the good people of the Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, a of right ought to be, Free and Independent States; that they are absolv from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection b tween them and the state of Great Britian, is, and ought to be, totally di solved; and that, as Free and Independent States, they have full power levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to all other acts and things which Independent States may of right do. A for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortun and our sacred honor."

Though this declaration was agreed to on the fourth, the resolution ado ing it was passed on the second day of July, and Mr. John Adams, w ing on the day after that memorable event, says: "The second day of Ju 1776, will be the most memorable epocha in the history of America; to celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival, co memorated as the day of deliverance by solemn acts of devotion to G Almighty, from one end of the continent to the other, from this time forw forevermore. I am well aware of the toil, and blood, and treasure that will cost us to maintain this declaration, and support and defend th States; yet through all the gloom, I can see the rays of light and glory; t the end is worth all the means; that posterity will triumph in that da transaction, even though we should rue it, which I trust in God we s not."

[The Editor reluctantly closes his extracts from Miss Dudley's Diary this point. It would be interesting to read her animadversions upon succeeding events, but they would frequently take us away from Cambrid which, as she has remarked, was very quiet after the evacuation of Bosto

The extracts already given subserve the purposes of this volume, and also unconscious witnesses to the firm and enthusiastic patriotism of writer, as well as to her remarkable ability as a gatherer and recorder of rent news at a period when the public press was not the all-pervading po that it now is.]

THE GUESTS AT HEAD-QUARTERS.

BY H. E. SCUDDER.

THE great square house which was provided for Washington's head-quarters in Cambridge, had seen a generous hospitality displayed, no doubt, when Mr. John Vassall occupied it and looked out over the broad acres attached to it, and noted the half dozen similar mansions scattered along the Watertown Road, that held his Tory neighbors. But the Virginian who took possession brought with him traditions of ample living and social habits which were re-enforced by the demands made upon the Commander-in-chief of the Continental army. Washington was a soldier, and a man, besides, of self-restraint. His moderation was seen in his diet, which was extremely simple, sometimes nothing, we are told, but baked apples or berries with cream and milk; and in his early and regular hours. As the central figure, however, in the American army, and representative of the cause which brought soldiers and civilians to Cambridge, he gathered about him, at his head-quarters, the officers of the army and the prominent visitors who for public or personal reasons made their way to the camp. The Provincial Congress enabled him to maintain a style of living which comported with his position, and his table was the social centre of the camp. Some of his officers dined with him every day. Let us see who they were that became familiar with the halls of this historic house.

Major-General Charles Lee was the most conspicuous of the military men toward whom the young country, anxious for heroes, looked with admiration. His romantic career as a soldier of fortune, his ready defence of the American cause, when other men of patriotic principle were more cautious, and his reputation for personal courage, gave him at once a strong hold upon the popular mind. Indeed, he cut a dashing figure beside the dignified, reserved Washington. He has been well described in his personal appearance as "a tall man, lank and thin, with a huge nose, a satirical mouth, and restless eyes, who sat his horse as if he had often ridden at fox-hunts in England, and wore his uniform with a cynical disregard of common opinion."[1] Seen near at hand, this restless, ambitious man piqued his comrades and friends by his apparently indifferent, contemptuous ways. He was always attended by a great dog, Spada by name, perhaps brought with him from Portugal, that shared his quarters in Hobgoblin Hall, went with him to dinner parties, and was formally presented to his guests and friends. Two years later, when General Lee was a prisoner, his dog was sent down the lines by General Greene under passport, and passes out of history just as Lee himself enters the shadow of a terrible reproach.

[1] Greene's Life of Nathanael Greene, vol. i. p. 100.

Of all the officers who then sat at Washington's table, Nathanael Greene was the one whose laurels have remained the most unfaded. This sturdy Quaker bred anchor-smith, who by slow but sure degrees had been welding his Quaker integrity and business faculty into sinewy completeness, now at the time of need was found with a steady brain and ready hand, slipping off easily the civilian and letting the soldier and sagacious general come forth. Washington's right hand man in the hard struggle to come that was to witness cabals and intrigues as well as open enmities, it is impossible but that the great general should have looked upon this New England man as one of the most welcome at his table.

The soldiers' favorite, General Israel Putnam, was also one of Washington's guests. No doubt this hot-headed, blustering, but brave officer brought other than the politest manners to the table of the Virginian gentleman, but Washington, with his cool, clear judgment of men, was not one to be governed in his tastes by the presence or lack of elegant manners. General Putnam brought to the military society an intrepid courage, a readiness of invention, and a bonhomie which must have rendered him an important element. One scene laid at the head-quarters is given, when Old Put dashes up to the gateway, bearing behind his saddle the woman to whom Church had intrusted his treacherous letter, and drags her, terrified, up the broad path way to the door.

Major Thomas Mifflin, afterwards general, now upon Washington's staff and residing in the old Brattle House facing the lane that led to Harvard Square, must have been a constant visitor. Brave and eloquent, he had a presence and manner which charmed all about him. His wife, in delicate health, was with him, but this did not prevent him from being eagerly sought by all the ladies of society, who sang his praise with hearty unanimity. It was he who, raised to the rank of colonel and quartermaster-general, was called to the council for determining the day when Dorchester Heights should be taken possession of, and made the suggestion, so quickly taken up, that the night of the 4th of March should be chosen since then, if a battle were fought on the 5th, the memory of the "Massacre" would give a rallying cry to the soldiers.

The Brattle Arms

Closer to Washington's person was the accomplished Joseph Reed, his secretary and dear friend, who wrote so freely and easily, and between whom and Washington there subsisted so charming a relation, leading the eserved general to write almost boyishly to the junior soldier. His answer to Governor Johnstone's temptation — "I am not worth purchasing; ut such as I am the King of Great Britain is not rich enough to do it," was he instantaneous and scornful message of a man of the highest honor.

It was in July when Washington took possession of the Vassall house, nd in November he was joined by Mrs. Washington, who made the solers' quarters a home, and received there the officers' wives, who had oined their husbands when it was evident that the siege was to be a winer one. Mrs. Greene was one of these, and out of the friendship that here sprang up came the names of George and Martha Washington given o the two children of General Greene and his wife. Mrs. John Adams also as a visitor, and records in her lively letters the social stir that was known n the Cambridge camp at this period.

But it was not only these who walked the broad pathway to the Vassall ouse, — officers and officers' wives and neighboring civilians, — but hospiality was extended to the public men of the Colony, to the members of the ommittee of Safety who visited the General, and of the Provincial Congress, sitting hard by in Watertown. The most noted company, however, hat sat at Washington's table, was when in October a committee of Congress, consisting of Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Lynch of Carolina, and olonel Harrison of Virginia, arrived to confer with the generals. With hese commissioners were present Deputy-Governor Griswold and Judge Nathaniel Wales from Connecticut, Deputy-Governor Cooke from Rhode sland, James Bowdoin, Colonel Otis, William Sever and Walter Spooner f the Massachusetts Council. The records of this conference have been reserved, and are a matter of history. We have a glimpse of a dinner arty given to them, afforded by Dr. Belknap, who was a guest, and who rites: "Lynch, Harrison, and Wales wished to see Boston in flames. Lee old them it was impossible to burn it unless they sent men in with bundles f straw on their backs to do it. He said it could not be done with carcass nd hot shot; and instanced the Isle Royal, in St. Lawrence River, which as fired at in 1760 a long time, with a fine train of artillery, hot shot, and arcasses, without effect." [1]

In this extract Dr. Franklin's voice is not heard. We can imagine that o visitor would attract more attention than this renowned man, who sat and stened to a discussion whether his native town should be destroyed. He as sixty-nine years old at this time, twenty-six years older than the comanding general. He represented the mind which had foreseen the imending conflict years before, and was able now to write to his philosophic iend Priestley: "Enough has happened, one would think, to convince our ministers that the Americans will fight, and that this is a harder nut crack than they imagine." His buoyant, hopeful nature, and shrewd, orldly wisdom, must have given to General Washington at this time a sense of strength in the council at Philadelphia, and it is not hard to imagi that between the great general and the sagacious statesman there shou have passed much deliberation, weighing of men and measures, gauging the forces in conflict.

[1] Life of Dr. Belknap, p. 96, quoted in Frothingham's Siege of Boston, p. 257.

The walls of the Vassall House resounded to talk of war and sport a frolic. Often Washington left the table in charge of one of his aids, a retired in accordance with his methodical habits. No one has preserv the record of the jest and story that were tossed back and forth by the eag young officers who were entering upon a war which, in its seven years' d tail, was to sober some, and lay some in the grave. The victories of peac of scholarship, and of letters, have been won because of the conferenc there held in the early days of the Revolution. The clank of spur and swo have ceased, but the voices of wisdom and of mirth have never yet di out within those historic walls.

THE BATCHELDER HOUSE, AND ITS OWNERS.

BY MRS. ISABELLA JAMES.

"We have no title-deeds to house or lands;
Owners and occupants of earlier dates
From graves forgotten stretch their dusty hands,
And hold in mortmain still their old estates."

LONGFELLOW.

THE story of a house where many generations have lived and died, can hardly be contained within the brief space allowed in this volume, yet these pages will give in as condensed form as possible some interesting facts connected with one of the most ancient houses of this historic town, if not the very oldest now standing in Cambridge. The dates here given, which will correct some accounts previously printed, have been drawn from deeds and other legal papers by the present owner of the estate, aged ninety-one and a half, who has held and occupied it for thirty-four years.

This ancient house stands on the southwesterly side of the old Watertown Road nearly opposite Mason Street. The first recognition of any highway in the town records of Cambridge is December 2, 1633: "Ordered that no person shall fell any trees within the path that goeth from Watertown to Charlestown." This path [1] is what was afterwards called the King's highway, and until after the Revolution was the only route from Market Square and the colleges to Watertown and the country beyond.

From the early records it appears that this part of Cambridge was called West End, for in the account of the houses and lands of the inhabitants of the town given in at a General Court holden at Boston 6th of 7th mo. A. D. 1642. "Cary Latham.[2] Imprimis, in West End, one dwelling house with outhouses and seven acres of land more or less;" then follow the boundaries on the southeast by Ash Street at that time called the Highway to Windmill Hill,[3] and northeast the highway to Watertown. 20th 5th mo., 1645, Latham conveyed the estate with the same boundaries to Thomas Crosby. At the first settlement of Cambridge, it appears that part of this land facing the Watertown Road was laid off in half-acre lots, one of which was owned and

[1] Now Kirkland, Garden, Mason, and Brattle streets.

[2] He removed early to New London, where he was representative in 1664 and 1670. — Sav. Gen.

[3] In a grant of land March 2d, to John Benjamin, there is this reservation, "Provided that the Windmill Hill shall be reserved for the town's use and a cartway of two rods wide unto the same."

occupied by Roger Bancroft before 1645, for in that year he bought anothe adjoining from Robert Parker, a butcher, whose son John graduated at Ha vard University, 1661. Evidence of this occupation of the premises tw hundred and thirty years ago appeared when Brattle Street was widened i 1871. The excavations made to rebuild the wall revealed heaps of anim bones which for a few hours created quite a sensation in the neighborhoo No record of a deed from Crosby can be found; but Thomas Marrit, on of the early settlers of Cambridge, was in possession of the property i 1663. From his will and inventory it appears that he held a good deal c land in this part of the town, the West End and West fields, and it wa probably from his great-grandson Amos [1] that Colonel Vassall, nearly a cent ury later, bought the land that so long bore the name of Vassall. The las clause of Thomas Marrit's will, dated October 15, 1663, is as follows: —

"To the children of my sonne George Bastow I do give and bequeath i full of what I stand engaged to them fifty-two pounds, on payment whered they shall give my executor a full and final discharge, and for the payme thereof this house and land wherein my sonne John Marrit lives to my frien Roger Bancroft to stand engaged on payment of the debt and legacy. H may sell or dispose of the said House and land as he shall please; finally do nominate and appoint my sonne John Marrit sole executor to this my las will and Testament." In the inventory that follows the first entry is "Th dwelling house and outhouses orchard and upland and meadow and mars and the Wold adjoining £90 00 00." The seventh "The dwelling hous and outhouses that was Roger Bancroft's and eight acres of land £50 00 00. Thomas Marrit died in 1664; and September 21, 1665, John Marrit con veyed to Jonathan Remington "one messuage or tenement in Cambridg containing one dwelling house, outhouses and barns and five acres of lan adjoining thereto." From the boundaries given in this deed the lot front ing on the Watertown Road extended from the western line of the presen row of old hawthorns and lindens to what is now Ash Street, excepting half-acre house lot [2] at that corner, and southerly nearly to the marsh.

Ash Street, once called Bath Lane, but previously known as the highwa to Windmill Hill, was the northwestern boundary of the palisado which th Court voted in 1632 to erect about "the New-Towne." This protectio against the wild inhabitants of the land commenced at Brick Wharf, say Holmes, then called Windmill Hill. About thirty years ago a mound wa plainly visible at the corner of Bath Lane, and the back road to Mount Au burn, which was known to the young people of the writer's generation a the Old Fort. When the street was straightened in 1844, and the presen proprietor bought a corner of the land and removed his fence, the founda tion of this fortification was uncovered revealing a built up wall of stones The house erected by Abel Stevens in 1874 now occupies the spot.

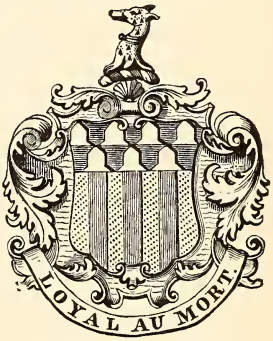
[1] A grandson, Amos Marrit, is mentioned in his will.

[2] Then the premises of Nathaniel Greene and Richard Eccles.

A year before Jonathan Remington purchased this estate, he had married Martha, daughter of the first Andrew Belcher; in this house it is probable that most of their married life was passed; he was town clerk and treasurer of Cambridge for many years; his son, Judge Remington of the Supreme Court, was eminent in his generation, and the daughter of the latter married Lieutenant-Governor William Ellery of Newport, and became the mother of the signer of the Declaration of Independence bearing that name.

September 22, 1682, Jonathan Remington conveyed to his wife's brother, Andrew Belcher, the same estate for £120. He was the son of the first Andrew who came to Cambridge, and was a shipmaster and merchant of Boston. He was called "an ornament and blessing to his country," for after the swamp fight in King Philip's war, December, 1675, Captain Belcher arrived in Narragansett Bay with provisions, and thus saved the troops from perishing. He held many important offices, and was a councillor from 1702 until his death in 1717. In 1700, he gave a bell to the Cambridge meeting-house, and the town gave the "old bell to the Farmers."[1]

At the death of Captain Belcher, this estate was inherited by his only son, Jonathan,[2] who was royal governor of Massachusetts and New Jersey for twenty-seven years. When, in 1730, he received his first appointment in England, Dr. Isaac Watts addressed to him an adulatory poem, some lines of which are said to be so extravagant as to border on impiety. His arrival at Boston with his commission, was hailed with the greatest joy. All the dignitaries of the town went to escort him from the ship; the military were out in full force, cannons were discharged, the turrets and balconies of the houses were covered with flags and carpets, while the shipping in the harbor displayed all their colors. Twenty-five years before this triumphant entry of Governor Belcher into Boston, the newspaper of the day described his marriage to Mary, daughter of Lieutenant-Governor William Partridge of New Hampshire. January 4, 1705–06, he was met at Hampton by several gentlemen from Portsmouth, and was accompanied by them and others who attended him, and arrived the same night in order to celebrate his marriage on the 8th, "but at the motion of the gentlemen that accompanied him," the marriage took place "the same night as he came off the journey in his boots. The wedding was celebrated on the Tuesday following (January 8th), when there was a noble and splendid entertainment for the guests." Why this unseemly haste,



THE BELCHER ARMS.

[1] Cambridge Farms, now Lexington.

[2] For much of the following account of Governor Belcher, I am indebted to the MSS. of Rev. J. L. Sibley, librarian of Harvard University.

the reporter of that day does not inform us; or why the ceremony should have taken place on Friday evening, after a long day's journey from Hampton on horseback,[1] in snowy if not muddy boots. We see how our modern telegram might have been useful here in notifying expectant Boston friends that the marriage had taken place four days earlier than had been anticipated. The occasion was "honored with the discharge of the great guns of the fort;" and the same day, it being the one which had been "designed for the marriage, several great guns were discharged at his father, Captain Andrew Belcher, Esq.'s Wharffe, and aboard several ships" at Boston. Under January 23, 1704–05, Sewall writes, "Mr. Jonathan Belcher and his bride dine at Lieutenant-Governor Usher's. Came to town at six o'clock —about twenty horsemen, three coaches and many slays." [2] The grandeur of the bridal occasion was only equalled by Mrs. Belcher's funeral, in 1730, at which it is related one thousand pairs of gloves were given away.

Governor Belcher took a deep interest in the colleges, first of Massachusetts and afterwards of New Jersey. His reply to the clergy on his Sunday at Boston in 1730, bore testimony to his attachment to his Alma Mater. He first met its officers 9th September, 1730, the day of the assembly at Cambridge of a prorogued legislature. He was "guarded into town by a military troop, then waited on by two foot companies." In his speech to the General Court he puts them "in mind of the happiness peculiar to this Province, in the early care our Fathers took for a liberal and pious Education of their Posterity by founding of a College," and assures them he "shall gladly embrace every opportunity they'l put in" his "power of nourishing that seminary of Rilegion and Learning." When he "had done with ye Court for ye forenoon and been a while at Mr. [tutor] Flynt's chamber ye Bell tolled, ye scholars assembled in ye Hall, his Excellency & ye Corporation went in, Mr. Holly made a Latin oration, his Excellency made a very handsome Answer in Latin. This done his Excellency, his Majestie's Council, ye Corporation, Tutors, Professors, with sundry Gentlemen dined in the Library; ye Masters at College were not invited 'twas feared there would not be room for them."

In a speech to the legislature, 16th December, 1730, he says, "When ye consider what a diffusive Blessing the College has been to this Country, in its Learning and Religion, and how much all the Estates among you have been rais'd in their Value, and that while other Plantations are oblig'd to send their sons abroad for Education at a great expence, and often to ruin of their Morals, we reap that advantage at home; I say I hope these things

[1] It may be possible, but hardly probable, that this journey was performed in sleighs.

[2] "The arms of the United States, viz., 'Pales of thirteen argent and gules, a chief azure,' bear a stronger resemblance to the arms of Belcher than they do to those of Washington. The colors indeed are different, and the number of pales is doubled, yet the principle of the two coats is identical. The Washington arms are as different as possible, having bars instead of pales, and, although our national flag may be founded on the Washington arms, our national seal is not."—Hist. and Geneal. Reg. vol. xxvii. p. 244.

ill make you ready on all occasions to nourish and cherish that society. nd what I would particularly point at is the Complaint of the sons of the rophets that they are straitned for room I am told that Stoughton College gone much to decay, and not without danger of falling I should be there- re glad that a committee of this Court might be chosen to view it and eport what may be proper to be done for the better accommodation of the udents there."

Governor Belcher desired that his remains should be taken from New ersey, where he died, to Cambridge, and interred by the side of his dear iend and cousin, Judge Remington. A tomb near the gateway of the raveyard holds the ashes of these eminent men, but the monument or- ered to be erected over them was never put up. The estate, held by Rem- igton for seventeen years, and by the Belchers for thirty-seven years, nited as they were by the closest ties of blood and friendship, may well be aid to have remained in one family for oyer half a century.

December 1, 1719, Jonathan Belcher conveyed six acres of land with the dwelling house, barns, outhouses, edifices, fences &c.," to John Frizzle, or £220. He was an eminent merchant of Boston, living at the North End, here Frizzle's Corner, in Garden Street between North and Fleet streets, ng commemorated his name. In 1719, he gave to the new North Church bell, which, though of small size and disagreeable sound, was used until 802, when the old meeting-house was taken down, and the bell sold to the wn of Charlton, Worcester County. Mr. Frizzle died 1723, and Dr. Cot- n Mather preached his funeral sermon ; nothing is to be learned from it, ays Drake, except that he was an honorable merchant. His widow, Doro- y Frizzle, married Mr. Saltonstall, and died in 1733, leaving £200 to the oor of Boston, and £20 to be laid out in Bibles and Testaments, to be dis- ributed among poor children. The estate was inherited by John Frizzle, r., who did not long survive his mother, as his widow Mercy conveyed, uly 26, 1736, to John Vassall, "a certain messauge or tenement containing by stimation six acres of land with a dwelling house, barn, and outhouses, hereon standing," for £1,000. When the elder Frizzle purchased the prop- rty in 1719, an ounce of silver was worth 12*s.* in 1736 it was worth 27*s.* ome antiquarians think that the Frizzles built an entirely new house upon he land, but there is no evidence that the original house was destroyed, hough if part of it was left standing, it was much enlarged, altered, and odernized ! It is evident to the present occupants that the eastern part f the house was added about this period ; the original foundation can be een in the cellar, excluding that portion. The rooms are higher studded in he new part, and the woodwork more elaborate, but the chimneys are laid n clay, which is said to denote the period before the introduction of lime. t will be observed that in each deed nearly the same words are used to escribe the estate as in that of 1665, " dwelling-house, out-houses, and arns," which prove that it was then a building of some pretensions. From careful data gathered by the present occupants, the oldest part of the hous is the western end, which once consisted of the entry and three rooms o the lower floor; the one on the left of the entrance was a small sitting-roon with two windows looking on the King's highway, while the window on th left of the door facing the paved court, lighted a pantry with oaken dressers and a broad oak shelf stretched across the window-sill for a punch-bow from whence many a stirrup-cup was doubtless drunk.

Over the fire-place in this sitting-room was a panel, which opened out wards, the depth of the chimney being sufficient to conceal a man, as we as papers and treasure. Within the remembrance of the writer, this fire place and panel were taken out, when pantry and sitting-room were throw into one. In the early times the kitchen was on the right of the entranc hall, and only of one story. In 1842, when the plastering of the chamber ove it had to be renewed, the old weather boarding was exposed, showing tha for a long series of years it had been acted upon by the stern winters an hot summers of a New England climate, unprotected by shingles, clapboarc or paint. The size of the kitchen chimney now encased in the wall, recall the times when ox-teams were necessary to draw the logs for the fire; it i eight feet long and eight deep. The house, though of wood, is filled in wit brick, and last year, in cutting a door between two rooms, a well laid bric partition wall had to be penetrated, where the carpenter expected to fin only a thin layer of lath and plaster. At what date the third room on th floor, the parlor, was enlarged, we have no means of knowing. Nearly fift years ago, the house presented a more venerable appearance than now: was rough cast, and from age had sunk almost below the level of the road it was raised up, and a new layer of dressed stone put under it; over a foo of earth now covers a handsome pavement of beach pebbles, on the ea and south sides of the house; and the southwestern wing containing th kitchen and offices, which were not raised with the main building, remains t prove the level of the old house.

We now return to 1736, when the estate passed into the possession c Colonel John Vassall, to whom the house has often been said to owe it origin. So much has been written and printed about the Vassalls, that need only be stated here, that they were an important family in Old Eng land, and early connected with the settlement of New England. The owned large plantations in the British West Indies, and several fine estat in Boston and its vicinity. It may be well to correct here a false impre sion that has prevailed, that some of the Vassall family had held the lanc known by their name, from the early settlement of Cambridge; but th first of their property here was this purchased of Mrs. Frizzle in 1736, an it was not until some years after John Vassall had sold it to his brother, tha he bought the land[1] afterwards known as the Cragie estate. The entir period when the various members of the family resided in this town, wa ss than forty years, but the impression they made upon the age yet sur-ves.

[1] A part of it, from Amos Marrit.

Colonel John Vassall, one of seventeen children, married Elizabeth, daugh-· of Lieutenant-Governor Phipps ; her three sisters [1] married gentlemen of stinction, who also lived in Cambridge, and her only brother resided in e old house, still standing in Bow and Arrow streets, sometimes called the inthrop House. It was no doubt the family interest of the Phippses in this wn that induced Colonel Vassall to settle here. Mrs. Vassall died in 39, and it was this breaking up of his family that caused him to sell the operty to his brother, then just about marrying a rich lady, also from the est Indies.

In 1741, Colonel Vassall sold [2] to his "brother Henry, now residing in oston, late of the Island of Jamaica, planter, seven acres of land, be it ore or less, with a dwelling-house, barn, and out-houses thereon stand-g ;" then follow the boundaries, which include the acre and a half now the estern end of the estate on Brattle Street, for which Colonel Vassall had otained, in 1737, a quitclaim deed from the heirs of Luxford Patten, for 100. The planting of the row of hawthorns and lindens must be due to n older owner than the Vassalls, as it marks the line between their estate nd the Luxfords, and was doubtless to shield the Frizzles from neighbor-g eyes, for a house once stood on that lot. When one of the lindens ed, twenty-four years ago, more than one hundred rings were counted in s trunk. With the house and land, Colonel Vassal sold "the furniture, nariot, four-wheeled chaise, two bay stone horses, and two black geldings," or £8,050. At this period an ounce of silver was worth 28*s.*, and it was a eason of great commercial prosperity. It is stated that the accounts of the ealth of Boston and the vicinity carried home by the English officers after ne taking of Louisburg in 1745, was the cause of the taxation of the Colo-ies which resulted in their loss to the British crown.

In 1742, soon after the purchase of the house and furniture, Major Henry assall married Penelope, daughter of Isaac Royall, who removed, in 1737, om Antigua to Medford, and built [3] a fine mansion, which is still standing nere. To this Cambridge home Penelope Vassall came as a bride, and lived ere thirty-four years. Major Vassall bought of his brother John, who had nade the purchase in 1747, the half-acre corner on Windmill Lane, and prob-bly at that time built the brick wall, which has so long been a landmark to ne traveller on Brattle and Ash streets. Here he died in 1769 and was uried in his tomb under Christ Church, of which he was one of the original ounders.

His granddaughter, Miss Catherine G. Russell, whom the writer well re-

[1] Mary married Judge Richard Lechmere; Rebecca, Judge Joseph Lee; and Sarah, Andrew oardman.

[2] It has often been said and printed, that he gave it.

[3] See Drake's Historic Fields and Mansions, p. 119.

members, said that Major Henry Vassall lived in the house twenty-seve years, dying here in 1769, and that his widow continued to reside here unt the Revolution. Cambridge, becoming a military camp, was neither a pleas ant nor safe residence for those who still adhered to King George, so tha Madame Vassall departed in haste for Antigua with her only daughter, th wife of Dr. Charles Russell of Lincoln. They left so hurriedly as to carr off a young girl by the name of Moody, a relative of Sir William Pepperel who was visiting here, and whom, on account of the state of the country, the were unable to return to her friends. She married in the West Indies, an only returned to New England on a visit many years afterwards. A stron belief prevails in Cambridge that a subterranean passage connects this hous with Mr. H. W. Longfellow's, and that it was constructed to enable the tw Vassall families to visit each other without exposure to the outside worl Many years ago the writer with her brothers and a brother of the Poet mad a progress through the cellars in a vain search after this mysterious an mythical passage-way, one of the party only retaining a conviction that a walled-up arch of solid masonry could be opened the entrance might b found. The story that this house is haunted has been current for sever generations.

"All houses wherein men have lived and died
Are haunted houses."

Popular tradition asserts that the slaves of the Vassalls were inhuman treated. There seems to be no foundation for this report, and there documentary evidence proving Madame Vassall's kindness in paying twen pounds, in 1772, to free the child of her servant Tony from slavery.

Tony Vassall, as he was called, had been brought from Jamaica when boy by one of the family, and was a character well known in Cambridge, f after the departure of his mistress he and his wife Lucy lived many years North Avenue, on the western side near Wright Street. The site of the house is still marked by a large horse-chestnut tree. In our grandmothe days he kept green the name of Vassall by his tales of their grandeur, and h own by relating the Apollo-like style in which he drove their chariot in Boston on week-days and to Christ Church, Cambridge, on Sundays. H mantle fell upon his son Darby, who of late years occasionally came out Cambridge with his pass from Miss Russell to entitle him to honorab burial in the tomb of his old mistress ; at last he died at the advanced a of ninety-two, and by a singular coincidence his body was brought out f interment on the centennial anniversary of the opening of the church, O tober 15, 1861. After his burial the tomb was to be forever closed.

"At her head
Lies a slave to attend the dead."

This estate, contrary to the generally received opinion, was never confi cated. At the breaking out of hostilities Mrs. Vassall had been for ma years a widow, and her only child was a daughter, so that they could ha aken no active part for the King. After her departure this large house vith its numerous rooms became the head-quarters of the medical depart- nent of the army, under the care of the director-general, Dr. Benjamin Church. Here his corps of surgeons lived, and here, probably, many a brave man wounded at Bunker Hill breathed his last. Here in this very oom may he have penned the letter the discovery of which caused his ar- est. Here in this house, we are told by a contemporary letter, was he con- ined, and corroborating evidence is found on the door of this room where write : " B. Church, Jr.," is still visible deeply cut in the wood, though for a entury successive coats of paint have vainly tried to conceal or to obliterate he name of a traitor. From this house, one hundred years ago, was he taken n a chaise (perhaps one of Madame Vassall's), and to the music of a fife nd drum, escorted by General Gates and a guard of twenty men to the lace of his trial in Watertown meeting-house, where he was sentenced to mprisonment in a distant town, which was afterwards commuted to trans- ortation for life. The ship in which he sailed for the West Indies was supposed to have gone down with all on board.

After the Revolution, the rights of Mrs. Vassall, and the mortgages with which the property was burdened, were purchased by Nathaniel Tracy of Newburyport, who also owned and occupied the estate of John Vassall on the opposite side of the road, where he resided in great state for a few years. This house was then occupied by Fred. Geyer, whose daughter, Marianne, married Andrew, the grandson of Governor Belcher, and his only representative in the male line.

In 1792, Andrew Cragie bought the whole property, and soon after Bos- senger Foster, his brother-in-law, removed from Boston and occupied this house. The children of Mr. Foster were Andrew Cragie's heirs, and after his death, in 1821, on the division of his estate that was not subject to dower, lot No. 1, the seven acres of Major Henry Vassall, and the house, fell to Elizabeth Foster, then the wife of Judge Samuel B. Haven, of whom the present owner purchased it in 1841.

I cannot more appropriately close this article than with the following son- net, recently written in the album of one of the young people of the family : —

" Old house, left standing in the garden bed,
Whispering memories of heroic days ;
Idly I stand, and from thy window gaze
On trains that creep to city of the dead.
Idly stood Church and leaned his heavy head
On window panes, that shut him from the sight
Of rolls of honor, where men's names were bright, —
— He scratched his name on prison-door instead.
The dead are dead, of body or of name

The grave holds dust, and on the record lies
The deadly story of the name that dies.
The living live, — on earth, aspiring flame,
In heaven, as stars that light us from the skies.
Old house ! through thee their image fills our eyes."

ENGLISH LETTER. APRIL, 1775.

From the Sparks Cabinet, at Gore Hall, belonging to William Eliot Sparks.

A Circumstantial Account of an Attack that happened on the 19th of April 1775, on his Majesty's Troops, by a Number of the People, of the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

ON Tuesday, the 18 of April, about half past 10th at night Lieutenant Colonel Smith of the 10th Regiment, embarked from the Common at Boston, with the Grenadiers and Light-Infantry, of the Troops there, and landed on the Opposite side, from whence he began his march towards Concord. where he was ordered to destroy the Magazine of Military Stores deposited there for the use of an Army to be Assembled in Order to act against his Majesty and his Gouernment, the Colonel called his Officers together and gave orders that the troops should not fire. unless fired upon, and after Marching a few Miles. — Detached six Companies of light Infantry under the Command of Major Pitcairn to take possession of two Bridges on the other side of Concord, Soon after they heard many signal Guns, and the ringing of Alarm Bells repeatedly, which convinced them that the Country was rising to oppose them, and that it was a preconcerted Scheme to oppose the King's Troops, wheneuer there should be a favorable opportunity for it. About three O'Clock the next Morning, the Troops being advanced within two Miles of Lexington. intelligence was received that about 500 Men in Arms were Assembled and determined to oppose the King's Troops, and, on Major Pitcairn Galloping up to the Head, of the advanced Companies, two Officers informed him, that a Man (advanced from those that were Assembled) had presented his Musquet and attempted to shoot them, but the Piece flashed in the pan. — On this the Major gave directions to the Troops to move forward, but on no Account to fire, nor even to attempt it without orders. When they Arrived at the end of the Village they observed about 200 armed Men drawn up on a Green, and when the Troops came within 100 yards of them, they began to file off towards some stone walls on their right Flank: The light Infantry observing this, ran after them, the Major instantly called to the Soldiers not to fire, but to Surround and disarm them, some of whom had jumped over a Wall. then fired 4 or 5 shot at the Troops. Wounded a Man of the 10th Regiment, and the Major's horse in two places, and at the same time Several Shots were fired from a Meeting-House on the left, Upon this, without any order or regularity the Light Infantry began a Scattered Fire, and Killed several of the Country People, but were Silenced, as soon as the Authority of the Officers could make them.

After this Colonel Smith Marched up with the remainder of the detachment, and the whole Body proceeded to Concord, where they Arrived about Nine O'Clock, without any thing further happening; but vast Numbers of Armed People were seen Assembling on all the heights, While Colonel Smith with the Grenadiers and part of the Light Infantry, remained at Concord to search for Cannon &c there, he detached Captain Parsons, with six light Companies to secure a Bridge at some Distance from Concord, and to proceed from thence to certain houses where it was supposed there was Cannon & Ammunition, Capt. Parsons, in pursuance of these Orders, posted three Companies at the Bridge, and on some heights near it, under the Command of Captain Laurie of the 43d Regiment, and with the remainder went and destroyed some Cannon Wheels, Powder and Ball.

The People still continued encreasing on the Heights, and in about an Hour after, a Large Body of them began to Move towards the Bridge, the light Companies of the 4th & 10th then descended and joined Captain Laurie, the People continued to Advance in great Numbers, and fired upon the King's Troops, Killed three men, Wounded four Officers, one Sergeant and four Privates, upon which (after returning the fire) Captain Laurie and his Officers, thought it prudent to retreat towards the main Body at Concord, and were soon joined by two Companies of Grenadiers; when Captain Parsons returned with the three Companies over the Bridge, they observed three Soldiers on the Ground, one of them Scalped, his head much Mangled, and his ears cut off, tho' not quite Dead: a sight which struck the Soldiers with horror: Captain Parsons Marched on and Joined the Main Body, who were only waiting for his coming up to March back to Boston Colonel Smith had executed his Orders, without opposition, by destroying all the Military Stores he could find; both the Colonel, and Major Pitcairn having taken all possible pains to convince the Inhabitants that no Injury was intended them, and that if they Opened their doors when required to search for said Stores, not the Slightest mischief should be done, neither had any of the People the least occasion to Complain: but they were Sulky, and one of them euen struck Major Pitcairn. — Except upon Captain Laurie at ye Bridge no Hostilities happened, from the Affair at Lexington until the Troops began their March back. — As soon as the Troops had got out of the Town of Concord they received a heavy fire on them from all sides, from Walls. Fences. Houses. Trees. Barns. &c. which continued without intermission, till they Met the first Brigade, with two field Pieces near Lexington, Ordered out, under the Command of Lord Percy, to support them; advice having been receiued about seuen O'Clock next Morn ng, that Signals had been made, and expresses gone out to alarm the Country, and that the People were rising to attack the Troops under Colonel Smith: Upon the Firing of the Field Pieces, the People's Fire was for a while silenced, but as they still continued to increase greatly in Numbers they fired again as before from all Places where they could find cover, upon the whole Body, and continued so doing for the space of 15 miles. Notwithstanding their numbers, they did not attack openly during the whole Day, but kept under couer on all occasions. The Troops were uery much fatigued, the greater part of them having been under Arms all Night and made a March of upwards of 40 Miles before they arrived at Charlestown, from whence they were ferryed over to Boston. —

The Troops had above Fifty Killed. and many more wounded. Reports are various about the loss sustained by the Country People Some make it uery considerable, others not so much.

Thus this unfortunate Affair has happened thro' the rashness and imprudence of a few People who began firing on the Troops at Lexington. — Contributed by MRS. M. C. SPARKS.

LETTERS OF EDMUND QUINCY.

Furnished by Miss Donnison.

Lanr June 18, 1776 —

To Ye Revd Mr. Jacob Bigelow.

Dr. Sir. I recd yr favor of ye 5th a few days since & am please with hearing Mrs. B. is satisfied with Eunice [1] her conduct: & hope ma continue, & that Mrs. B. will testify her regards in suitable instruction o a spiritual as well as temporal nature, & thereby increase her expecte serviceableness — I'm disappointed in ye girl's failing in ye faculty of milk ing wh she was used to at Mr. B's: possibly instruction and practise ma conquer the difficulty. Labor improbus omnia vincit — you'll suppose, as do, ye Girl will want some supply of money, I ask ye favor of Mrs. B to se that the most prudent application be made. We are now publicly alarme with the B. naval & land force expected agt ye city & county of N. Y perhaps it may be begun; it will, I hope, under ye irresistible decrees o D: P: prove ye means of opening ye eyes of ye B. Court & nation, even of flashing conviction before them, that there is an impregnable Bar rier now raised & fixt between their cruel as well as hostile designs, an the late feeble & unprepared Colo of America — wh. I think by the will o Heaven are fast rising into States, wh. under ye protection of ye God of Ar mies, may become objects of ye closest European attention & commercia attraction: and these things seem not to be very distant.

The probability of a full native supply of every needed warlike article o defence by sea & land is a distinguishing circumstance, wh. ye nations wi early mark out. As a fundamental cause of ye future growth of ye No. A States: & ye strife will be, wh. European powers will avail themselves mos of their future commerce, should ye Fla. of war be confined to Europe each will be fond of furnishing their manufes to these, as they suppose unprovided & incapable Americans: but on ye other hand, ye latter, not blinded, will choose & labor to provide themselves with materials & manufactures as fast as they need them: for every needed community, & as to ye superfluous, it is to be supposed, that each state, will by law, discou age ye importation by heavy duties — Altho. we have a country, (I mean th

[1] A colored woman owned by E. Q.

United Provinces) capable of almost every European production & bounding in more extensive native productions than any K. dom & perhaps all in Europe, we must, nevertheless, endeavor to imitate the wise example of ye 7 United provs of Holld after ye revolt from Spain & during heir 30 years war with that then powerful Kingdom.

We must promote agriculture, manufactures, industry & economy & bove all cultivate Religion & Virtue May the Giver of peace grant these J. States a series of peaceful years & that by means thereof ye American eathen may be bro't ye saving Knowledge of ye True God.

These will even be ye subject of ye earnest supplications of ye faithful hro' ye gospelized regions of No. America.

I am with my best wishes to you and yr household Sir, &c. —

P. S. By last advice we have now in our hands abt, 700 of those Highlandrs wh ye Brit Admon at an immense expense deceived last year with a promise f their being sent to A. to take possession of ye evacuated estates of those who they were told had fled back 100 miles & more into ye wilderness, hrough ye terror of ye Brit. arms &c. wh ye Captives now acquaint us vith, standing astonished at ye falsity of ye facts wh they were made to beieve some appearing very morose under ye disapt & others well eno satisied — you'll have read of ye absolute refusal of ye Ld Howe to take command f ye ministerial naval force to ye singr mortification of the ministry & doubtess of their Head. It is improbable his lordship was of opinion, that one Bror was enough to share ye Infamy wh. he had become sensible would prove ye result of ye ministerial proceedings Pray God ye final issue may graduate with his Ldships just apprehension! However it's probable he nay soon have work nearer home as they are doubtless on the verge of a European Breach — A farmer would be very remarkable who would set his logs to worry his sheep, while his neighbors cattle were breaking into his ields, ye fences having become indefensible.

Lanr June 24, 1776

To The Hble J. Hancock Esq.

Dr Sir. I hope ere this Mr Bant with my Dr K. has had ye pleasure of seeing you & Dr H. well at P. By ye Contls Lr of advice to ye convento at N. Y. we are daily expecting adv. of a Minl Fleet & army being before that city & a siege begun. Letters from Hx of 5th curt inform us that no Fleet had arrived there to that day, but that it was very sickly in ye F army & navy, that many refugees of Yro Bo had died, among whm were named F Lillie & wife & Mr. J. Fitch his eldest dr & that F : lay at ye point of death. It is doubtless a very melly time in that Asylum of of ye B. troops & thr Frds Yr may have recd odrs fro Europe wh may give you nsight into the causes by wh ye minl proceedings have been embarrd & heir grand Armament delayed — here we are left to our own conjectures.

you'll be advd probably ere this reaches you, that by batteries at lengt erected, near ye entr of Bo Harbor — Como Bank's ship & his convoy ha been obliged to make a precipitate flight abt 10 days ago, & that sever ships with Highlanders have been drove and carried in by our privateers not fewer in no. than 4 or 500 — great part of whom have been bro into ye several towns & more expected, in order to ease ye Cha. of thei support & to prevent mischief. It is expected we may hear of more arrival of troops at Bo as to an attack upon it, I'm not much concerned, if, as I'l told their fortifications are compleated in a defensible manner.

When Commo Banks lay in the harbour, a Contl Privateer having bee taken & bro't under his care, it gave occasion for a Flag of truce to go o bord for exchange of prisoners — ye business being ended, ye afflicte Commo mentd to ye Co. ye disastrous atta of his boats on Capt. Muckfor of Mbh. & another p. of only 7 men on board — He told them he had los 63 of his best offers & men: supposing that a part of them were in ou hands, & said he hoped they treated Lt Banks well. They replying th they had heard of no such person being bro't among them, B. appeare vastly concerned saying that he had then lost his brother & 1st Lt. & on of his best offrs in ye navy — however we hear a corps was found upon th beach some days since & supposed to be that of ye person mentioned b B. — it being clad well with a pr. of pistols, a hanger, some money in y pockets & a gold watch. It is said that not more than 30 men were o board the 2 privateers wh. if fact, & also that they were unexpectedly a tackt it would argue much courage in the defenders, one of wh Capt. I told them he wanted to know the name of as having proved himself a bol & stout man, in beheading one of his boat's crew looking over the gu wale of the privateer with one stroke of his broad sword saying to ye cre in ye fisherman's dialect, "I've taken off his head, you may gut him." B such men ye character of American prowess is fast advancing. I hear b a friend from Bo that ye Highlanders, especially ye officers may have a peared morose & ill tempered imagining they had got among unpolishe people till ye funl rites were prepared of their Major killed by one of th privateers, who was decently interred by milty honor, attended by a no. our offers & ye inhabitants — after which these strangers seemed to thin they had go into a good country * * * * 10 guineas a head were paid the at listing, after 6 mos. imprisonment they were embarqued — several hu dred deserted after enlistment on hearing that no evacuation of Estates ha been heard of in it, so that their expectations would be frustrated. We a still without any certain advice how things stand in Canada, but we are to well assured of some of ye Minl Cash having lately operated on Sevl of y Contl officers — I presume ere this come to hand ye Congs may have re from ye sevral Colo their assent to a speedy Declaration of Independenc upon & a total disconnection, with the Gov. of G. B.

I hope this may meet you in ye enjoyment of such a degree of health as may enable you to sustain ye wgt of ye present public incumbrance —
With my kind regards to my Daughters
I rem very sincerely D. Sir, your
Aff. & obliged Fnd & Fathr

P. S. 29 This going open for want of conv'y'nce we have adv from N. Y. of more than 100 conspirators there in Gaol for a design on ye Genls life & also for blowing up 30 tuns of powder — a plot similar to that of 1588 & I think a similar fate ought to be the portion of ye present conspirators.

THE RIVER CHARLES IN JUNE.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

The sliding Charles,
Blue toward the West, and bluer and more blue,
Living and lustrous as a woman's eyes.
Look once and look no more, with southward curve
Ran crinkling sunniness, like Helen's hair
Glimpsed in Elysium, insubstantial gold;
From blossom-clouded orchards, far away
The bobolink tinkled; the deep meadows flowed
With multitudinous pulse of light and shade
Against the bases of the southern hills,
While here and there a drowsy island rick
Slept and its shadow slept; the wooden bridge
Thundered, and then was silent; on the roofs
The sun-warped shingles rippled with the heat;
Summer on field and hill, in heart and brain,
All life washed clean in this high tide of June.

From "Under the Willows."

OLD CAMBRIDGE.

Know old Cambridge? Hope you do. —
Born there? Don't say so! I was, too . . .
— Nicest place that ever was seen, —
Colleges red, and Common green,
Sidewalks brownish with trees between.
Sweetest spot beneath the skies
When the canker-worms don't rise, —
When the dust, that sometimes flies
Into your mouth and ears and eyes,
In a quiet slumber lies,
Not in the shape of unbaked pies
Such as barefoot children prize.

DR O. W. HOLMES.

Dear native town! whose choking elms each year
With eddying dust before their time turn gray,
Pining for rain, — to me thy dust is dear;
It glorifies the eve of summer day,
And when the westering sun half-sunken burns,
The mote-thick air to deepest orange turns,
The westward horseman rides through clouds of gold away.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

THE OLD COURT HOUSE.

BY JOHN HOLMES.

THE old Court House, which stood on the site of the present Lyceum, was built from the timbers of the meeting-house which was replaced ı 1756 by that which was demolished in 1833.[1]

The beams, joists, and rafters which had so often heard the Law and its orks depreciated from a theological point of view, were now to recognize ıe Law in another sense, as the stern presiding spirit of the place. They ere now to see whether the people would in this transformed building, at-ɔnd as strictly to their temporal interests as they had before done to their ɔiritual.

While the colonial dependence lasted, it would seem that the judges of ıe Superior Court, coming to hold their sessions here, were received at the ounty or town line by the sheriff and attendant gentlemen, and escorted in ɔate to their lodgings,[2] which, in this case, being interpreted, probably ıeans Bradish's Tavern, on the present Brighton Street. If we listen, we ear break on the quiet of the past, the rumble of wheels and the thump of oofs making mild thunder on Brighton Bridge. While Cambridge was yet village, this was the sound that late in the night warned the wakeful of a ew arrival, and by its cadence, allowed him to guess whether it were the illage doctor returning from a call extraordinary, or a courier panting to tell f success or disaster at Lake George.

We behold the commotion as of to-day. The villagers quit their gray, npainted houses, as if they were in flames. Children get the start. Women eer from the windows, or group on door-steps, and snatch a breath of ɔspite from their unending cares. Austere men who combat the world and s pleasures, move slowly forth, go circuitously and drop (as it were), casu-ly and unconsciously into the throng. Suitors and sued, witnesses sum-ıoned for the term, amateurs of litigation who have had their losses, — the ıany who love the mysteries of the civil, and doat on the dread forms of ıe criminal process, — poor debtors, who "swear out" from time to time,

[1] Our authority is the Rev. Lucius R. Paige, who, beside other motives, has now that of self-fence, to finish his History of Cambridge, so numerous are the local questions put to him which he ndly answers.

[2] Washburn's Judicial History of Massachusetts.

and who know every spider in the Old Jail (near Winthrop Square), a every mullein and thistle in its yard, and who, from long habit, scrutinize t world in small portions as through grated windows, — all these contribu to the variety of the crowd.

The "Scholars" (to use the popular term some fifty years since) are hu rying to the scene of action, the banyan (such as Prescott wore at Bunk Hill) floating wide behind them as they run. This garment, a long cali dressing-gown, was still popular in summer so late as 1820.

Bradish stands at his door, grave and portly. His cue, newly bound wi black ribbon, hangs perpendicular, like a pendulum stopped by earthquak

What ceremonies attended the opening of the court we cannot say, b the judges doubtless wore their "robes of scarlet English cloth, their bro bands, and their immense judicial wigs,"[1] and probably the barristers a peared "in their bands, gowns, and tyewigs."[2]

We think we may have beheld the "last attenuation" of judicial pon in seeing the late Chief Justice Shaw going from the court to his dinn accompanied (not preceded) by the sheriff alone. The latter carried in easy way a long, light wand (using it, we think, somewhat like a cane), which lay, we suppose, like latent caloric, the protective, vindictive, a remedial power of the Commonwealth.

Here Sewall, Hutchinson, and Lynde presided, and here attended the gr colonial lawyers, Pratt, Gridley, Trowbridge, and the rest. Special ple ing was in its full vigor. It was a stern, compulsory system of statem and argument, designed to lead by the shortest way, to an issue of law fact, to be decided by the Court or the jury. No such theory, submitted the working of strong hands, fails to be more or less warped out of sha and this had undoubtedly its share of subtlety and finesse. If one of tho old law practitioners were compelled to revisit earth for a term, he would fi no better reading than the "quiddits and quillets," filed in our Court Hou at that day.

The lawyers were then, as they are now, the gladiators of a better civ ization.

After the Revolution, Chief Justices Dana and Parsons presided here the sessions of the Supreme Court. The latter lodged during the sessi at a house, which, if it were standing, would be the third building on t left-hand side of Brighton Street, north from Mount Auburn Street. H the great lawyer diverted himself in the evening, with what other m might deem labor. An old member of the bar who lodged here has oft told us with complacency of his evening colloquies with the Chief Justi Dexter, H. G. Otis, and other well known lawyers represented the n republican bar.

In or about 1815, the courts were removed to East Cambridge, and t Court House ceased from its former functions.

[1] John Adams, from Washburn's Judicial History of Massachusetts. [2] Same.

The Court of Probate was still occasionally held here by the late Judge ay.

Town meetings, which had been held here for an indefinite time, were, in 831, transferred to the then new City Hall, on Main Street, in Cambridge-ort.

When the division took place in the First Parish, the Court House was ccupied for Sunday worship until the Orthodox Church on Mount Auburn treet was completed.

Lyceum lectures and debates were begun here about 1830, and held their round with very considerable tenacity. The public finally became satiated nd dropped off in something like a comatose state. The great variety of ubjects, and the distractions of a social surrounding, left, it is to be feared, rather nebulous result on the general mind.

Cambridge had been for many years remarkably exempt from fires. From ear 1812, we recall from hearsay or observation, no serious fire. The own therefore was obliged to borrow its excitement on this score from eighboring calamities. And to judge by the demonstrations, the sufferers iemselves could hardly have felt the situation more intensely than our itizens. The parish bell was immediately set going, nor ceased while any aint gleam of light appeared on the horizon. Nearly all the male inhab-tants cried fire incessantly for some half hour. The "scholars" lent their ings to assist the town. The engine rushed madly though heavily out nto space, and returned. One got to feel as if this were a beneficial oper-tion. The alarm bell actually suggested security. When it rung out with he greatest vigor, and for the longest time, the householder knew that the re was very distant, and that our conscientious citizens could not relax heir efforts while the flames appeared, or were reflected on the sky.

But in October, 1839, a fire actually occurred within our own precincts, hich consumed three houses and a barn, and, as usual, threatened much ore destruction. At the beginning of the following winter, a suspicion rose that incendiaries were preparing to repeat, on a comprehensive scale, he calamity of October.

We can recollect no cause assigned for the new alarm, and possibly the magination worked with more effect, uncontrolled by specific evidence. It vas soon found that a citizens' patrol was necessary to protect the town. It vas arranged, and fixed its head-quarters in the old Court House. We rec-llect only a tendency to hilarity that pervaded the organization, at variance vith the imminent hazard which they labored to avert. Walking, watch-ng, and friendly converse occupied the midnight hours. Consciousness of nerit, was the pure and honorable reward of our exertions. No refresh-nents were furnished to dilute or vitiate this noble sensation.

We infer the greatness of the impending danger, from the great and gen-ral effort made to avert it. And it is a memorable fact, that so extensive nd desperate a confederation of incendiaries should have been entirely crushed by our demonstration. Perfect incombustibility seemed to preva during this period, and in a community, too, where one man in twenty was probable Guy Faux.

There is always one drawback on precaution, — that it cuts off the ver evidence that should justify it. The patrol of 1840 were subject to this i convenience.

Only one arrest was made. It was of a man who at a very early hour the morning was detected carrying incendiary material toward the colleg He was seized with his lantern and his various pyrotechnics, carried t the Court House, and subjected to severe examination. He proved to be professional incendiary, i. e., a fire maker in the college. His trial, thoug in a measure pro forma, gave an aspect of efficiency to the patrol, and adde to its moral strength. The dullest intellect perceived what might have oc curred, had the prisoner been one of the real confederates, and had no patr existed to arrest his deadly career.

No monument or inscription commemorates the services of that time, n even a bronze extinguisher of minute size.

Among the members of the patrol, rheumatism, cough, and catarrh m have done their work, but no voice has proclaimed the fact. Wide awal beneficence disdains to stir sleeping gratitude, but any member of the patr may proudly say, pointing to the unconsumed town, Circumspice.

In 1841, the old Court House was sold, and was removed back to t west side of the present Palmer Street. Here it was at first used for billiard room and bowling alley ; next for a gymnasium and fencing scho then (on the lower floor, — having been changed to a two-story building) f furniture — then on the same floor for hardware. It was removed within year or two to the west side of Palmer Street, and made to adjoin Whitney Block, with which it communicates. The lower floor is at present occ pied by a "Holly Tree Coffee Shop," the upper by the Social Union, kind and wisely conducted by those to whose modest merit we pay the unust compliment of omitting their names.

THE LAMENT OF THE WEATHERCOCK OF 1776.

"Carmina jam moriens canit exequialia [gallus]." — Ovid, Met. XIV. 430.

"He makes a swan-like end, Fading in music." — Shakespeare.

At midnight's solemn hour I woke; —
The moon all brightly shone;
I rose, and donned my old plaid cloak,
And wandered forth alone.

The air was still, — no sound nor noise, —
The earth all silent, too;
When an unearthly, piercing voice
Cried, "Cock-a-doodle-doo!"

I started, and my knees did knock
Together, in my fear,
For 't was the ancient weathercock
That startled thus my ear.

Thrice did he flap his wings, and crow,
Ere he the words could bring;
Then, as I trembling stood below,
'T was thus I heard him sing: —

"Farewell to thee, old Cambridge! Farewell to each and all!
I 'm doomed to an ignoble fate, and an untimely fall.
Farewell, my pleasant, airy home! my heart is big with sorrow,
To think, thou dear old steeple! that we must part to-morrow.
And the people that once loved us must also from us part; —
They 've built a grand new church and spire, surmounted by a dart;
That gaudy, glittering arrow, that I can plainly see,
Is ever striving with the wind, to aim itself at me.

"Farewell to thee, old Harvard! Peace be within thy walls!
Sound learning and true wisdom aye flourish in thy halls!
No more may I behold thy courts and corners all alive
With little black-coats, buzzing round, like bees about a hive;

No more may I behold their troops in mock militia muster,
Nor see them on the parting day around the old elm cluster.
The last Commencement Day, it was a bitter day to me,
For I felt that it must be the last I evermore should see;
And my old friend, the Phi Beta! I can scarce restrain my tears,
For the music of thy last sweet song is ringing in my ears.

"Alas! the meeting-house and I have doubtless had our day;
And the spoiler comes to-morrow to take us both away.
But we 'll not depart in anger, nor will I much repine
That this exalted station can be no longer mine.
My conscience bears me witness, that ever, from my youth,
I 've lived an upright weathercock, and always told the truth.
My life has been a long, and I hope a useful one;
And now I droop my crest, and am ready to be gone."

Thrice did he flap his wings, and crow,
When he his song had done;
Then, wondering, homewards did I go,
Just as the clock struck one.

December 22, 1833.

These lines were written by Mrs. Charles Folsom, when the old meeting-house was taken dow
The "last sweet song," mentioned in the sixth stanza, was Mr. Longfellow's Phi Beta Kappa poem Ed.

PRAISE OF THE PAST.

BY GEORGE PARSONS LATHROP.

OF ancient days how manifold
The harvests here around us grown!
What fruits we hold, by valiant-souled
And simple farmer-heroes sown!

They, while they learned the bullet's creed
No less in solemn worship kneeled;
By faith and deed they spread the seed
Of peace and strength in every field; —

And ours the rich maturity,
While over us, afar and near,
That broad-arched tree, the century,
Spreads wide its branches, each a year!

Ah well, how swiftly things disperse:
In how much changed are place and time!
For poets rehearse their dulcet verse
Where patriot-spurs once clinked in rhyme;

The city spreads its ravages;
The grace of older growth is fled:
Hills bow their knees, prone lie the trees,
Faith, too, they say, is long since dead.

Yet with our fathers we are one
At heart, whatever change betide,
Still shines for us their tireless sun:
Their truth still waits us for our guide.

And we, though larger grows the scope
Of vision, now, toward God and man,
From broader hope gaze back Time's slope
To praise their virtue's narrower plan.

Oh, when our crumbling lives have gone,
Shall others unto us look back
O'er deeps that yawn, and see our dawn
Glow pure behind their devious track?

Who knows? We live in veering days.
Yet o'er all fame our deeds may hold,
Fair shines this praise, this record stays: —
WE DID NOT LET THE PAST GROW OLD!

A PARTIAL LIST OF AUTHORITIES CONSULTED IN PREPARING THIS BOOK.

Colburn. Bibliography of the Local History of Massachusetts.
Palfrey. History of New England.
Hubbard. History of New England.
Holmes. History of Cambridge.
Wood. New England's Prospect.
Dudley. Letter to the Countess of Lincoln.
Mather. Magnalia.
Johnson. Wonder-Working Providence in New England.
Prince. New England Chronology.
Winthrop. History of New England.
Newell. Discourse on the Cambridge Church Gathering in 1636.
Lives of the Chief Fathers of New England. Vol. vi., The Life of Thos. Hooker, by Edw. W. Hooker. Vol. iv., The Life of Thos. Shepard, by John A. Albro.
Hudson. — History of Lexington.
Jackson. History of Newton.
Bond. Genealogies and History of Watertown.
Mason. Gazetteer of Massachusetts.
John Dunton. Letters from New England.
Hutchinson. History of Massachusetts.
Barry. History of Massachusetts.
Drake. Historic Fields and Mansions of Middlesex.
Drake. Old Landmarks and Historical Personages of Boston.
Hoppin. Historical Notice of Christ Church.
Clarke and Force. American Archives.
Journals of each Provincial Congress of Massachusetts in 1774 and 1775, and of the Committee of Safety.
Frothingham. Siege of Boston.
Records of the Massachusetts Bay Colony.
Town Records of Cambridge.
Bancroft. History of United States.
Frost. Pictorial History of United States.
Villard. Republic of America.
Marshall. Life of Washington.
Sparks. Writings of Washington.

Quincy. History of Harvard College.
S. A. Eliot. History of Harvard College.
Griswold. The Republican Court.
Sabine. Loyalists of the American Revolution.
Amory. Old Cambridge and New.
Simpson. Two Hundred Years Ago.
Letters of John Adams.
Letters of Mrs. Adams.
Homes of American Authors.
Madame Riedesel's Memoir and Letters.
McKenzie. History of the First Church of Cambridge.
McKenzie. Washington in Cambridge, "Atlantic Monthly," July, 1875.
McKenzie. Memorial Address on Cambridge Men who fell at Lexington.
Tracy. Great Awakening.
Wells. Life and Public Services of Samuel Adams.
Duyckinck. National Portrait Gallery of Eminent Americans.
Dawson. Correspondence on the Character of General Israel Putnam.
Dawson. Diary of David Howe.
Phelps. History of Newgate of Connecticut.
Curwen. Journal and Letters.
Parton. Life of Aaron Burr.
Trumbull. Reminiscences of His Own Times.
Bridgman. Epitaphs from Copp's Hill Burying Ground, Boston.
Harris. Epitaphs from the Old Burying Ground, Cambridge.
Peabody. Centennial Address at Cambridge, July 3, 1875.
Hawthorne. Twice-told Tales.
Hale. One Hundred Years Ago.
Clarke and Vaille. The Harvard Book.
Washburn. Judicial History of Massachusetts.
Greene. Life of Nathanael Greene.
Sibley. Biographical Sketches of Graduates of Harvard University.
Sibley. Manuscript Collections.

INDEX.

Adams, John, 32, 61, 88.
Adams, John, his hopes, 15.
Adams, John, in Cambridge, 53.
Adams, Mrs. John, in Cambridge, 42.
Adams, Samuel, 23, 33, 54.
Amen, Dr. Appleton's, 31.
Ammunition, The lack of, 12, 26, 27.
Appleton, Rev. Dr., 31, 49, 59, 62, 72, 80.
Apthorp, The Rev. East, 10, 50, 51.
Apthorp house, 21, 50.
Apthorp, Mad. Grizzel, 51.
Army, The New Continental, 51.
Arnold, Benedict, 37, 55.
Authorities, List of, 119.

Batchelder house, see (Henry) Vassall house.
Belcher, Jonathan, 95, 97; Arms, 95.
Belknap, Dr. Jeremy, 39, 91.
Bigelow, Rev. Jacob, 106.
Borland house, see Apthorp house.
Boston, becomes the Capital, 4; besieged, 26.
distress in, 21; evacuated, 59.
Bradish Tavern, 18, 75, 111.
Brattle Arms, The, 90.
Brattle grounds, 75.
Brattle house, 35.
Brattle's Mall, 43.
Brewster house, see Sewall House.
British fleet leaves Boston, 81.
Bunker Hill, 13, 24, 29.
Burgoyne, Gen., 23.
Burr, Aaron, 28, 33, 37.
Butler's (Dana) Hill, 31, 74.
Byles, Mather, 70.

Caghnawaga Indians in Cambridge, 53.
Calef, Robert, his book burned, 48.
Cambridge commerce, 8.
Cambridge, its influence in 1776, 12; its territory, 6; sketch of, 3.
Camp diet in Cambridge, 58.
Canada, expedition to, 36, 55.
Caner, Dr., 51, 65.
Charles river in June, 110.
Chauncy, President Charles, 35, 46.
Christ Church, 11, 29, 49.
Church, Benj., 37, 80, 101; condemned, 40; his traitorous correspondence, 37.
Church Row, 77.
Clergy, The, 14.
Clinton, Gen., 23.
Cobble Hill, now Somerville, 41.
Cold, in the church, 57.
Colonies, The thirteen, 51.
"Common Sense," 54.
Congratulations addressed to Washington, 61, 62.
Congress, The first provincial, 10.
Copp's Hill, 66, 70.
Correspondence, Epistolary, decaying, 36.
Court House, The, 72, 111.
Cragie, Andrew, 101.
Cragie house, see (John) Vassall house.
Crime in camp, 43.

Dana Hill (Butler's Hill), 31.
Dana house, 74.
Dankers and Sleyter visit Harvard, 47.
Declaration of Independence anticipated in Cambridge, 80.
Donnison, Miss, 106.
Dorchester Heights occupied, 59.
"Dorothy Q," 32, 84.
Downing, George, 44.
Dudley, Dorothy, her diary, 18.
Dudley, Thomas, 3.
Dunster house, 75.
Dunster, Rev. Henry, 45.

Eaton, Nathaniel, 45.
Edwards, Timothy, 32.
Eliot, John, 8.
Elm, The Washington, 16, 26.

Episcopacy in Cambridge, 9.
Evacuation of Boston, 69, 83.

Faculty of Harvard organized, 48.
Fast Day, 27, 59.
Fayerweather house, see Ruggles house.
Faneuil Hall, 65; used as a theatre, 53.
Fires in Cambridge, 113.
Flag, The Union, 51.
Fleet, The British, sails from Boston.
Fort Number One, 75.
Franklin, Benjamin, 23, 37, 40, 54, 91.
Frizzle, John, 97.
Frost, Mr., 77.

Gage, Gen., 10, 21, 22, 37.
Gale, Theophilus, 46.
Gates, Gen. Horatio, 26.
Gates, Mr., 49.
General Court in Cambridge, 9.
Green Dragon Tavern, 65.
Greene, Gardner, 64.
Greene, Gen., 40, 52, 67, 90.
Guests at Head-Quarters, The, 89.

Hancock house, Boston, 64.
Hancock, John, 23, 32, 50, 52, 84, 107.
Hancock, Mrs. Dorothy, 32.
Hancock, Mrs. Lydia, 32.
Harvard College, 7, 14, 15, 29; removed to Concord, 20; sketch of, 44, 48.
Harvard College, its buildings, 72, 76.
Harvard Hall, burned, 48.
Haskins, D. G., Jr., 3.
Hastings house, 20.
Haynes, John, 4.
Head-quarters, see (John) Vassall house.
Heath, Gen., 60.
Hessians, to be hired, 52.
Hicks, John, 19.
Hoar, Leonard, President, 46.
Hobgoblin Hall, Medford, 42.
Holly Tree Coffee Shop, 114.
Holmes house, see Hastings house.
Holmes, John, 111.
Holmes, O. W., 110.
Holyoke, Edward, 48.
Hooker, Rev. Thomas, 4.
Howe, Gen., 23, 37, 41, 52, 59, 60, 83.
Hutchinson, Mrs. Anne, 6.
Hutchinson, Thomas, 66.

Independence declared, 87.
Inman house, 31, 74, 75.
Inman, Ralph, 74.

Jackson, Edmund, 84.
Jail, The, 75.
Jefferson, Thomas, 87.

King's Chapel, 65.
Knox, Gen. H., 68.

Langdon, Samuel, 15, 23, 48, 57, 82.
Lechmere's Point, 40, 58.
Lechmere, Richard, 50, 78.
Lee, Charles, 26, 42, 89.
Lee house, 78.
Lee, Judge Joseph, 31, 50.
Lee, Richard Henry, 87.
Leverett, John, 48.
Lexington, 28.
Lexington, The Battle of, from a British point of view, 103.
Liberty Tree, Boston, 63.
Lincoln, Benjamin, 81.
Livingston, Robert, 37.
Locke, Samuel, 48.
Longfellow house, see (John) Vassall house.
Longfellow, H. W., 31, 66, 100.
Lowell house, see Oliver house.
Lowell, J. R., 110.

Manifesto of Congress, 17, 27.
Manly, Capt., captures the Nancy, 42.
Marcy, William, 19.
Mather, Cotton, 44, 66.
Mather, Rev. Increase, 46, 66.
Menotomy Road, 29, 77.
Mifflin, Major Thomas, 26, 35, 40, 42, 53, 90.
Montgomery, Gen. Richard, 37, 55.
Mugford, Capt., 80.
Murray, Elizabeth, 74.
Murray, James, 74.

Newe Towne, the first name of Cambridge, 3, 94.
Nichols house, see Lee house.
Noble, Rev. Mr., of Newburyport, preaches, 57.
North Church, Boston, 47, 65.

Old President's house, see Wadsworth house.
Old South Church, 63.
Oliver house, 25, 79.
Oliver, Thomas (Lt. Gov.), 40, 50.
Otis, James, 48.

Paige, Rev. Lucius R., 111.
Paine, Thomas, 54.
Patriotic resolution passed in Cambridge, 80.
Patrol of citizens, 113.
Peabody, The Rev. A. P., 12.
Pemberton Hill, Boston, 63.
Percy, Lord, 18.
Phipps house, 21, 25, 31, 75.

Phipps, Lt. Gov., 99.
Pitcairn, Maj., 36, 103.
Powder, Want of, 31.
Praise of the Past, 115.
Prescott, Col., 23, 29, 112,
Printing-press, The first, 7.
Province House, The, 63.
Putnam, Gen. Israel, 22, 26, 41, 42, 52, 69, 90.

Quebec attacked, 55.
Quincy, Dorothy, 32.
Quincy, Edmund, 50, 84; Letters of, 106, 107.
Quincy, Katy, 67, 84, 86, 107.

Richardson, Moses, 29, 77.
Riedesel house, see Sewall house.
Riverside Press, 75.
Recruiting in Cambridge, 41.
Regicides, The, in Cambridge, 9.
Reed, Col. Joseph, 26, 46, 90.
Remington, Judge, 97.
Revere, Paul, 63, 65, 66.
Royall, Isaac, 42, 99.
Ruggles, George, 31.
Ruggles house, 25, 31, 79.
Rules of Harvard, 46.
Rush, Benjamin, 54.
Russell, Catherine G. 99.

Sibley, Rev. John Langdon, his Sketches of Harvard Graduates, 45, 95.
Simsbury, Conn., 43.
Serjeant, The Rev. Winwood, 10, 31, 50, 77.
Sewall house, 31, 50, 78.
Sewall, Jonathan, 31, 50, 72.
Shaw, Chief Justice, 112.
Shepard Memorial Church, 46.
Shepard, Rev. Thomas, 5, 46.
Small-pox in Boston, 60.
Social Union, The, 114.
Soden Farm, 27.
"Spada," Gen. Lee's dog, 42.
Sparks, William Eliot, 103.
Sparks, Mrs. M. C., 105.
Stark, Gen., 21, 68.
St. Patrick's Day, 83.
Stone, Rev. Samuel, 4.
Students return from Concord, 82.
Sullivan, Gen., 56, 61, 68.
Synod of 1646, at Cambridge, 8.

Tea, not used, 67.
Temple, Robert, 50.
Ten Hills Farm, Somerville, 50.
Thomas, Gen., 53.
Thompson, Capt., 18.
Thompson, Col., 40.
Ticonderoga, 22.
Tobacco smoking at Harvard, 47.
Tories in Cambridge, 17, 21.
Tory families, and their relationships, 50.
Tory Row, 77.
Trumbull, Major John, 26.

Vassall, Henry, 99.
Vassall house (Henry), 21, 25, 31, 34, 39, 75, 77, 93.
Vassall house (John), 31, 55, 77, 89.
Vassall, Col. John, 89, 98.
Vassall, Tony, 77, 100.
Visit, a, to Boston, 62.

Wadsworth, Benjamin, 48.
Wadsworth house, 16, 74.
Waldo, Cornelius, 78.
Waldo, Daniel, 78.
Watertown Road, 93.
Walton, Capt., 77.
Ward, Gen. Artemas, 26, 50, 62.
Warren, Gen. Joseph, 19, 22, 24.
Washington, Gen. George, 11, 15, 25, 53, 61, 62; forbids games of chance, 57; his habits, 92; his exactness in accounts, 56; original letter of, 56; in Christ Church, 49; thanked by Congress, 83.
Washington, Mrs. Martha, 55; her levee, 69.
Wells house, see Ruggles house.
West End, The, of Cambridge, 93.
Whitefield Elm, 76.
Whitefield, The Rev. George, in Cambridge, 9.
Wigglesworth house, 73, 74
Windmill Hill, 94.
Winthrop, Gov., 3, 45.
Winthrop house, see Phipps house.
Winthrop, Mrs. Dr., 29.
Woodbridge, Rev. B., 44.

HISTORICAL WORKS.

FAMILIAR LETTERS OF JOHN ADAMS AND HIS WIFE, ABIGA. ADAMS, DURING THE REVOLUTION; with a memoir of Mrs. Adams by CHARL FRANCIS ADAMS. In one volume, crown 8vo, $2.00.

Mrs. Adams's Letters have long been recognized as important contributions to the history of t period in which they were written. Several editions have appeared at intervals, and the demand a new edition has suggested to the editor that the corresponding letters to her husband should added. Many new and interesting letters appear now for the first time.

THE GERMAN ELEMENT IN THE WAR OF AMERICAN INDI PENDENCE. BY GEORGE WASHINGTON GREENE. In one volume, cr. 8vo, $1.5

The brilliant and romantic story of Steuben and De Kalb, and the dark disclosures respecting t German Mercenaries, are presented pointedly and with nervous force in this monograph by an e nent historic scholar.

A HISTORICAL VIEW OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. I GEORGE WASHINGTON GREENE. In one volume, crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

In a small space of 450 octo-duodecimo pages, the accomplished author gives a complete view the principles, laws, and development of the contest, with enough of the details to illustrate th concrete action, so that the reader who desires to pursue any one of the lines of investigation in cated can do it under the direction of definite ideas. The volume thus fills a place in our literatu which is occupied by no other work. It is at once a generalized history of the Revolution, and stimulating guide to the study of its details. — Boston Transcript.

THE LIFE OF NATHANAEL GREENE, MAJOR-GENERAL IN TH ARMY OF THE REVOLUTION. By GEORGE WASHINGTON GREENE. In thr volumes, 8vo. Portrait and Maps. Cloth, $12; half calf, $19.50.

The book combines solid investigation and completeness of materials with cool reasoning a earnest truth. . . . . The author's charming simplicity of style is in keeping with the character the hero. In our days of steam, telegraphs, and railroads, the Life of Greene produces the effect a classic Plutarchian biography. Let every father give this book to his son. — New York Event Post.

FIRST STEPS IN GENERAL HISTORY. A Suggestive Outline. I ARTHUR GILMAN, M. A. With Maps and Charts. In one volume, 16mo, clot $1.25.

The object of this Suggestive Outline of General History is to stimulate the st dent to make thorough investigations, and at the same time to furnish a gui which shall indicate the general path to be pursued.

It is not dry reading, — chronological bones, denuded of flesh and nerve, — but general, comp hensive, yet concrete views of events grasped according to their degree of relationship. — Profess Henry N. Day, of Yale College, in the College Courant.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

A superb life-size portrait of the poet LONGFELLOW will be sent with t ATLANTIC MONTHLY for 1876 to any person remitting $5.00 direct to the pu lishers.

The programme of the ATLANTIC for 1876 includes contributions from the able and best writers in the country. LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, HOLMES, and WHITTI will furnish, as hitherto, their latest and best productions to the public through tl ATLANTIC. WARNER and ALDRICH will write on Eastern and Continental Trave GEN. HOWARD will give his recollections of Gettysburg and other famous battles the War; and MARK TWAIN will contribute some of his inimitable papers. M HOWELLS'S story, "Private Theatricals," MRS. KEMBLE'S "Old Woman's Gossip and MR. ADAMS'S papers on "Railroads" will be among the special features of tl year, and new attractions will be constantly added.

Terms: Single or specimen numbers, 35 cents. Yearly subscription, $4.00, posta free; with life-size portrait of Longfellow, $5.00.

Remittances by mail should be sent by a money-order, draft on New York Boston, or registered letter, to H. O. HOUGHTON & CO., Riverside Press, Cambridg Mass

H. O. HOUGHTON AND COMPANY, Boston.
HURD AND HOUGHTON, New York.

What the Great Writers say of WORCESTER'S DICTIONARY.

The new and authentic etymologies, the conciseness and completeness of the definitions, the nicety with which the different shades of meaning in synonymes are distinguished, and the conscientious accuracy of the work in all its departments, give it, in my judgment, the highest claims to public favor. — William Cullen Bryant.

I concur with the opinion of Mr. Bryant. — Washington Irving.

Worcester's orthography and pronunciation represent, so far as I am aware, the most approved usages of our language. — Edward Everett.

On questions of orthography, I shall make it [Worcester's Dictionary] my standard. — George Bancroft.

Worcester's Dictionary has constantly lain on my table for daily use, and Webster's reposed on my shelves for occasional consultation. — Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The Senate need only go to a simple dictionary; I will not go to a law book, or to any work on the law of nations, but I take what I think is THE BEST AUTHORITY, WORCESTER'S LARGE DICTIONARY. — Hon. Charles Sumner, in the U. S. Senate, Feb. 21, 1872.

More complete and exact than any of its predecessors. — Rev. W. Whewell, D. D., Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, England.

That the public may appreciate your labors for the good cause of "English undefiled," and your work be received with the applause it so justly merits, is my sincere wish. — Henry W. Longfellow.

I am truly surprised and highly delighted to find that you have succeeded far beyond my expectation in making the proper selection [of scientific terms] and combining with it a remarkable degree of accuracy. More could hardly be given except in a scientific cyclopædia. — Louis Agassiz.

It is a most remarkable work of which America will be justly proud, and for which all who study the English language will long have reason to respect your name and to be grateful to you. — Charles Dickens.

 WORCESTER'S DICTIONARIES are for sale by booksellers generally.

BREWER & TILESTON, Publishers,

47 FRANKLIN STREET, BOSTON.

POETIC LOCALITIES OF CAMBRIDGE.

Edited by W. J. STILLMAN. Illustrated with Heliotypes from Nature. 1 vol., 4t
$3.50.

The "Gambrel-Roofed House," the "Washington Elm," Harvard Colleg
Charles River, and other objects in Cambridge that have been made famous b Longfellow, Holmes, and Lowell, are represented in this book by admirable Helic types. The letter-press comprises descriptions selected by Mr. Stillman from th writings of the above-named Cambridge poets. It is a unique, beautiful, and val able book.

OLD LANDMARKS AND HISTORIC PERSONAGES OF BOSTON.

By SAMUEL ADAMS DRAKE. With many Illustrations. $3.00.

There is nothing about old Boston worth knowing that may not be found in thi book. Every person of any note, magistrate, clergyman, lawyer, merchant, mechani every spot of historic ground, every church and burying-ground and public build ing and private dwelling of famous memory, every old tavern and stage-hous and their frequenters, every ancient street and lane and wharf and shipyard, find place in these pages. All New England will read this book; for what Faneuil Hal is to Boston, Boston is to New England. And it will be eagerly sought for by th sons and daughters of the dear old city, who are scattered up and down the land and everywhere through all the world. — Universalist Quarterly Review.

HISTORIC FIELDS AND MANSIONS OF MIDDLESEX.

By SAMUEL ADAMS DRAKE. 8vo. Illustrated with Heliotypes. $5.00.

In dealing with a theme so admirably adapted to his special bent Mr. Drake ha in general discharged his task in a manner to call for high praise. From printe authorities, from fast-perishing tradition, and from personal observation, he ha drawn a great array of interesting details, which ought to be preserved in a perma nent and at the same time a popular form; and he seems to have left no source un searched which persistent industry could discover. His volume carries the reade over ground with which every student of our Revolutionary history and every love of our contemporaneous literature should be familiar. — Boston Transcript.

ENGRAVINGS FROM LANDSEER.

Twenty-four Plates, reproducing with the utmost fidelity some of the most fa mous of Landseer's works, including The Challenge, Chillingham Red Deer
The King of the Forest, The Monarch of the Glen, High Life, Low Life, Layin Down the Law, Shoeing the Bay Mare, and others of equal beauty, with elab orate account of Landseer's Life and Works. Quarto, $10.00.

CHILD-LIFE IN PICTURES.

Containing Twenty-four Heliotype Plates, from Correggio, Copley, Reynolds Greuze, Lawrence, Murillo, Gerard, Raphael, and other celebrated painters — forming a series of charming pictures of Children and Child-Life. Quarto $10.00.

 For sale by all Booksellers. Sent post-paid, on receipt of price by the pub lishers.

JAMES R. OSGOOD & CO., BOSTON.

Mercantile SAVINGS
Institution,

581 Washington Street,

BOSTON.

SIX PER CENT. INTEREST

Paid on deposits remaining in Bank from April 1st to October 1st, or from October 1st to April 1st.

All other deposits will draw interest at the rate of

FIVE PER CENT.

For every full calendar month they remain in bank.

This is the only Savings Bank in the State that pays

Interest on Deposits for every full month,

And the only Savings Institution that has

A Paid-up Guarantee Fund of $205,000

For the protection of its depositors. Deposits commence drawing interest on

The First day of each month.

The deposits now remaining in bank exceed

$4,700,000.

LYMAN S. HAPGOOD,
President.

ANSON J. STONE, Treasurer.

FREDERIC H. HENSHAW, Assist. Treas.

L. PRANG AND COMPANY,

ART AND EDUCATIONAL PUBLISHERS,

Have in Press:

THE THEORY OF COLOR, IN ITS RELATION TO ART AND ART-INDUSTRY By Dr. W. Von Bezold, of Munich. Translated by S. R. Koehler. With an Introduction and Notes by Prof. Edw. C. Pickering. Illustrated by Chromo lithographic Plates and Wood-cuts. 8vo.

L. PRANG AND COMPANY also publish:

THE AMERICAN TEXT-BOOKS OF ART EDUCATION. Prepared by Prof. Walter Smith, General Supervisor of Drawing in the Boston Public Schools and State Director of Art-Education for Massachusetts.

Professor Walter Smith's Text-Books have been introduced into nearly all the large cities of the United States, and the success which has attended their use in the Public Schools of Massachusetts is the best proof of their intrinsic value.

☞ Circulars, containing full information, will be sent gratis to any address, on application.

WATER-COLOR STUDIES, after originals by C. Ryan. Selected by Prof. Walter Smith, and in use in the Massachusetts State Normal Art School. 12 Plates varying in price from $1.50 to $6.00 each.

PLANT FORMS ORNAMENTALLY TREATED Designed by Miss Grace Carter of the South Kensington Art School, under the superintendence of Prof. Walter Smith. 10 folio plates. Price $20.00.

PARALLEL OF HISTORICAL ORNAMENT. A selection of prominent and characteristic examples in the different styles, arranged so as to present, both in form and color, a comparative view of their principal features. Prepared by Karl E. Heinzen, under the superintendence of Prof. Wm. R. Ware. 10 folio plates. Price $15.00.

INDUSTRIAL DRAWING COPIES for Mechanics and Students in Industrial Evening Schools. Prepared by Jas. E. Stone, under the superintendence of Professor Walter Smith. 24 large folio plates. Price $6.00.

PRANG'S AMERICAN CHROMOS.

These chromolithographic reproductions of Oil and Water-color Paintings are acknowledged to be the best anywhere made, even in Europe, a fact which is attested by their Constantly Increasing Sale in Europe.

☞ Illustrated Catalogues mailed gratis to any address. Apply to

L. PRANG AND COMPANY, Boston, Mass.

771